out the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as Calite soap.

The sturdy pear-tree here
Will life luxuriant, and with toughest root
Pierce the obstructing grit and relive marble.

4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder; the several particles of which are of no de-terminate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or dissolved by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass. They are opaque, and in many species fermenting with acids, and often fouled with heterogeneous matters. One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with salt-water into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards dissolved by water. This is the pulvis putrescens of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plasters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysolite of the ancients, which they used in folding gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of soldering metals better than borax, and may be had for carriage from the shores of New England. The ferrugineous black glittering grit, is the black shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy.

What is commonly used in London is from Genoa. The coarse, glittering, brownish black is nearly of the same nature, but inferior, in all respects.

GRITTYNESS. n. f. [from gritty.] Sandiness; the quality of abounding in grit.

In fullers-earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grittiness.

GRITTY. adj. [from grit.] Full of hard particles; confisting

I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof.

GRIZELIN. adj. [More properly gridlin. See GRIDELIN.]

The Burgundy, which is a grizelin or pale red, of all others, is furest to ripen in our climate.

GRIZZLE. n. f. [from grit, gray; griffaille, French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath fow'd a grizzle on thy face?

GRIZZLED. adj. [from grizzle.] Interpersed with gray.

To the boy Cæsar, lend this grizzled head.

His beard was grizzled, no.

—It was as I have seen it in his life.

His hair just grizzled.

As in a green old age.

Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide
In plenteous growth, their asper ears to hide.

GRIZZLY. adj. [from grit, gray, French.] Somewhat gray.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled, and turn white;

and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly.

GROAN. v. n. [granan, Saxon; groenen, Dutch.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.

Many an heir
Of these fair edifices, for my wars,
Have I heard groan and drop.

Men groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded crieth out.

Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit.

So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning.

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs and groan his pains.

On the blazing pile his parent lay,
Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away.

GROAN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Breath expired with noise and difficulty.

Alas poor country,
Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd!

I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;
And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive.

2. Any hoarse dead sound.

Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard.

GROANFUL. adj. [groan and full.] Sad; agonizing.

Adown he fell it with so puissant wail,
That back again it did aloft rebound,

And gave against his mother earth a groanful sound.

GROAT. n. f. [groat, Dutch; grosso, Italian.]

1. A piece valued at four pence.

2. A proverbial name for a small sum.

To call them woollen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats.

I dare lay a groat,

A tertian ague is at least your lot.

Imagine a person of quality prevailed on to marry a woman much his inferior, and without a groat to her fortune.

3. GROATS. Oats that have the hulls taken off.

GROCER. n. f. [This should be written groffer, from grois, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from grissini, a fig, which their present state seems to favour.]

A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar and plums and spices for gain.

But still the offspring of your brain shall prove
The grocer's care, and brave the rage of Jove.

GROCERY. n. f. [from grocer.] Grocers ware, such as tea, sugar, raisins, spice.

His troops, being now in a country where they were not expected, met with many cart-loads of wine, grocery, and tobacco.

Your only wearing is your gramam. Donne.
Natolia's flocks great store of chamelots and gramams. Saunders.
Some men will say this habit of John's was neither of camel's skin nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, gramam, or the like. Brown's Vul. Err.
The natural sweetness and innocence of her behaviour shot me through and through, and did more execution upon me in gramam than the greatest beauty in town had ever done in brocade. Addison.

Plain goodly would no longer down;
'Twas madam in her gramam gown. Swift.
GROIN. n. f. [Of uncertain derivation.] The part next the thigh.

The fatal dart arrives,
And through the border of his buckler drives;
Pac'd through and pierc'd his grain; the deadly wound
Came from his chariot, roll'd him on the ground. Dryden.
GRO'WELL. n. f. [litospferum, Latin.] Gromill or gray-mill. A plant.

The cup of the flower consists of one leaf, cut into five long narrow segments: the flower, which is, for the most part, small, consists of one leaf, is funnel-shaped, and open at the top: the point is incomplett by four embryo's, which become so many roundish hard polished seeds. Miller.

GROOM. n. f. [grom, Dutch.]

1. A boy; a waiter; a servant.
Then called the a groom, that forth him led Into a goodly lodge. Spenser.
From Egypt's king ambassadours they come;
Them many a squire attends, and many a groom. Fairfax.
Think then, my soul! that death is but a groom
Which brings a taper to the outward room. Donne.
In the time of Edward VI. lived Sternhold, whom king Henry his father, a little before, had made groom of his chamber, for turning of certain of David's psalms into verse.
Peacock on Poetry.

Would'st thou be touch'd
By the presuming hands of faucy grooms? Dryden.
Amid' the fold he rages, nor the sheep
Their shepherds, nor the grooms their bulls can keep. Dryd.

2. A young man.
I presume for to intreat this groom,
And filly maid, from danger to redeem. Fairfax.

3. A man newly married.
By this the brides are wak'd, their grooms are dress'd;
All Rhodes is summon'd to the nuptial feast. Dryden.

GROOVE. n. f. [from grave.]
1. A deep cavern, or hollow in mines.
He might, to avoid idleness, work in a groove or mine-pit thereabout, which at that time was little esteemed. Boyle.

2. A channel or hollow cut with a tool.
The sewer-plate is a kind of steel well tempered, with several holes in it, each less than other; and in those holes are threads grooved inwards, into which grooves fit the respective taps that belong to them. Mason.

To GROOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut hollow.
The plates of iron fastened at the bottom of the box preserved the balance while it fell, and every joint of it was well grooved. Swift.

To GROUPE. v. n. [grapan, Saxon.] To feel where one cannot see.

My sea-gown scarf about me, in the dark Grep'd I, to find out them. Shakespeare.
We gripe for the wall like the blind, and we gripe as if we had no eyes. Isaiab.

They meet with darkness in the clearest light;
And gripe at noon, as if involv'd with night. Sandys.
A boy was gripping for eels, and laid his hand upon a snake. L'Estrange.

This, no doubt, is better for men than that they should in the dark gripe after knowledge; as St. Paul tells us all nations did after God. Lecke.

He heard us in our course,
And with his out-stretch'd arms around him grip'd. Addison.
O truth divine! enlight'n'd by thy ray,
I gripe and guess no more, but see my way. Arbutnot.
To GROUPE. v. a. To search by feeling in the dark; to feel without being able to see.

How vigilant to gripe mens thoughts, and to pick out somewhat whereof they might complain. Hayward.

They have left our endeavours to gripe them out by twilight, and by darkness almost to discover that, whose existence is evidenced by light. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

But Strephon, cautious, never meant
The bottom of the pan to gripe. Swift.

GRO'PER. n. f. [from g. p. e.] One that searches in the dark.
GROSS. adj. [grais, French; graffi, Italian; crassus, Latin.]

The crows and choughs, that wing the mid'ry air, Shew scarce to grafs as beetles. Shakespeare.
There are two grafi volumes concerning the power of popes. Bale.

2. Shameful; unseemly.
He ripely considered how grafs a thing it were for men of his quality, wife and grave men, to live with such a multitude, and to be tenants at will under them. Hein.

They can say that in doctrine, in discipline, in prayers, and in sacraments, the church of Rome hath very good and grafs corruptions. Hein.

So far hath the natural understanding, even of fairly whole nations, been darkened, that they have not discerned, in our grafs iniquity to be sin.

3. Intellectually coarse; palpable; impure; unrefined.
To all grafs 'tis grafs

You love my son: invention is abhorr'd,
Against the proclamation of thy passion,
To say thou dost not. Shakespeare.

Examples grafs as earth exhort me.
Like grafs terms,

The prince will in the perfectness of time
Cast off his followers. Shakespeare.

Belial came last, than whom a spirit more level
Fell not from heaven, or more grafs to love
Vice for itself. Alfieri.

Is not religion so perfectly good in itself, above all, it is author, that, without the grafs sensuality, we cannot but admire it. Spence.

It is a grafs mistake of some men, to think that our wants only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be beneficient. Swain.

4. Inelegant; disproportionate in bulk.
The sun's oppressive ray the rosiest bloom
Of beauty blanching, gives the gloomy hue,
And feature grafs. Tenison.

5. Thick; not refined; not pure.
It is manifest, that when the eye standeth in the firm medium, and the object is in the grafs, things there grafs;
but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grafs medium, and the object in the grafs. Bacon.

Of elements,
The grafs feeds the purer; earth the sea,
Earth and the sea feed air. Milton.

Light fumes are merry, grafs fumes are sad;
Both are the reasonable soul run mad. Dryden.

Or suck the mists in grafs air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow. Pope.

6. Stupid; dull.
If she doth then the subtle sense excel,
How grafs are they that drown her in the blood? Evans.

And in clear dream and solemn vision,
Tell her of things that no grafs ear can hear. Milton.
Some men give more light and knowledge by the bare telling of the question with perspicuity and justice, than others by talking of it in grafs confusion for whole hours together. Watts.

7. Coarse; rough; opposite to delicate.
Fine and delicate sculptures are helped with grafs, and grafs with diffidence. Watts.

8. Thick; fat; bulky.
GROSS. n. f. [from the adjective.]

The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste
The deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;
Or, if with caution leisurely were pass,
Their numerous grafs might charge us one by one. Dolan.

Several casualties are of opinion, that, in a battle, you should discharge upon the grafs of the enemy, without losing your piece at any particular point.

The grafs of the people can have no other project in changes and revolutions than of public blessings. Watts.

2. The bulk; the whole not divided into its several parts.
Certain general inducements are used to make grafs voice cause in grafs. Watts.

There was an opinion in grafs, that the soul was immortal. Watts.

Remember, son,
You are a general: other ways require you;
For see the Saxon grafs begins to move. Dolan.

Notwithstanding the decay and loss of family trade and manufactures, yet, in the grafs, we ship off now one third part more of the manufactures, as also lead and tin, than we did twenty years past.

'The champagne head

Of a fleep wildernefs, whole hairy fides

With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild,

Access deny'd. Milton.

There is yet a lower fort of poetry and paintings, which is out of nature; for a face is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the perfons and actions of a face are all unnatural, and the manners fafe, that is, inconfifting with the charaeters of mankind: grotesque painting is the juft refemblance of this. Dryden.

An hideous figure of their foes they drew,

Nor lines, nor looks, nor fhades, nor colours true, }
And this grotesque defign expos'd to publick view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors,

Grotesque roofs, and flaccid floors. Pope.

Woodward on Fiffelt.

GROVE. n. f. [from grave.] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought

The wood began to move:

Within this three mile may you fee it coming;

I fay, a moving grove. Shakefp.

Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales;

Thrice happy ifles! Milton.

Banifh'd from courts and love,

Abandon'd truth fees fhelter in the grove. Granville.

Can fierce paffions vex his breaft,

While every gale is peace, and every grove

Is melody? Tranfen.

To GROVEL. v. n. [gravelle, Ilhandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground feel.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.

The feel-head paffage wrought,

And through his fhoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground

He graveling fell, all gored in his guffing wound. Spenfer.

What fee'ft thou there? king Henry's diadem,

Inchas'd with all the honours of the world!

If fo, gaze on, and gravel on thy face,

Until thy head be circled with the fame. Shakefp.

Now they lie

Graveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milton.

Upon thy belly graveling thou fhalt go. Avilten.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to acquire this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to fhew themfelves: 'tis to creep and gravel on the ground. Dryden.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.

I muft difclaim what'er he can exprefs;

His graveling fenfe will fhew my paffion lefs. Dryden.

up with bread or oatmeal. Sharp's Surgery.

8. The firft ftatum of paint upon which the figures are afterwards painted.

We fee the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with fhadows and darkfome colours. Hairwill on Providence.

When folid bodies, fenfible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and tranfparent grounds, as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters, and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more diftinguifhable, than that with which they are encompaffed. Dryden.

9. The fundamental fubftance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are fupported.

Indeod

Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground. Pope.

10. The plain long; the tune on which defanks are raised.

Get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll build a holy delcant. Shakespeare.

11. First hint, first traces of an invention; that which gives occasion to the tell.

Though jealousy of state th' invention found,
Yet love reliev'd upon the former ground;
That way the tyrant had reliev'd to fly,
Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.

12. The first principles of knowledge.
The conrords will easily be known, if the fore grounds be thoroughly beaten in.

Here statelinen, or of them they which can read,
Down, May of their occupation find the ground.
After evening repasts, 'till bed-time, their thoughts will be best taken up in the early grounds of religion, and the story of scripture. Milton.

13. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle.
He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident.

Making happiness the ground of his unhappiness, and good news the argument of his sorrow. Sidney.
The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hucker.

Thou could'st not have discern'd
Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake,
No ground of enmity between us known. Milton.
Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures. Clarendon.

Sound judgment is the ground of writing well. Rojcamm.
Love once given from her, and plac'd in you,
Would leave no ground I ever would be true. Dryden.

If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillotson.

Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Swift.

The miraculous increase of the professors of Christianity was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury.

14. The field or place of action.
Here was thy end decreed, when these men rose;
And ev'n with theirs this act thy death did bring.

Or hasten'd at the least upon this ground. Daniel.

15. The place occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire.

At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to lose ground. Sidney.

Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their ground,
While ours with easy victory were crown'd. Dryden.
He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Senepa. Dryden.

16. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer.

Evening mist,
Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels, Homeward returning. Milton.

Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory. Addison.

Even whilst we speak our conqueror comes on,
And gathers ground upon us every moment.

17. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors.

Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung. Shakespeare.

If they got ground and vantage of the king,
Then join you with them like a rib of steel,
To make them stronger. Shakespeare.

He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Atterbury.

Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worst enemies of the two, but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph gloriously over the others. Atterbury.

18. State of progress or recession.

I have known so many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Aullria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.

The quill is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage;
she runs apace, and wears herself with the continual motion, and gets no ground. Dryden.

19. The soil to set a thing off.

Like bright metal on a fallen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no soil to set it off. Shakespeare.

To GROUND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fix on the ground.

Wherever she had grounded her foot, neither gods nor men could force her to retire. Rom. c.

2. To found as upon cause or principle.

Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of con-parison. Flour.

It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with. Boya.

If your own actions on your will you ground,
Mine shall hereafter know no other bound. Dryden.

Some eminent spirit, having signalized his valor, becomes to have influence on the people, to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rather incite us to fly to a single person than a multitude. Laing.

3. To settle in first principles or rudiments of knowledge.

Being rooted and grounded in love. Eph. iii. 17.

GROUND. The pretense and part. plaf. of grind.

He took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder. Exod. c.

How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground

GROUND is much used in composition for that which is not the ground, or near the ground.

GROUND-ASH. n. f. A sapin of ash taken from the ground, not a branch cut from a tree.

A lance of tough groundash the Trojan drew,
Rough in the rind, and knotted as it grew. Dryden.

Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large straight shoots, which they call groundash. Marston.

GROUND-BAIT. n. f. [from ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it.

Take the depth of the place where you mean to set your groundbait, and to fish. Marston.

GROUND-FLOOR. n. f. [ground and floor.] The lowest story of a house.

GROUND-IVY. n. f. [hedera terrestris, Latin.] A kind of tunhoof.

The shoots trail upon the ground, and emit new from almost every joint, which fall themselves into the earth:
the leaves are roundish, thick, rough, and crested on the edges: the helmet of the flower is roundish, bald, and ex-flexed: the beard or lower lip is triid, or cut into three segments; the middle segment is broad and bald, and the flowers are produced at the joints of the shoots. The species are common groundivy, or gill-go-by-ground; and several, and groundivy. Miller.

Alehoof or groundivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.

GROUND-OAK. n. f. [ground and oak.]

If the planting of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the coopers trade for the making of hoops, either of hael or ash; because one hoop made of the rough shoots of a ground-oak, would outlast six of the best oak.

GROUND-PINE. n. f. [chamaepitys, Latin.]

The leaves are narrow and triid; the flower stalks: the place of the crest of the flower is supplied with five teeth:
the lower lip is divided into three parts, the middle segment being split again into two parts. The flowers rarely grow in whorles, but one or two are produced at the edge of the leaves. Miller.

The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of resin; whence its name chamaepitys. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch-banks by marshes. It is highly extolled, by the generality of medical writers, as an aperient, cephalic, and nervous medicine; but it is however little used at present. Mill.

GROUND-PLATE. n. f. [In architecture.] The external pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortises and tenons. In these also are mortises made to receive the tenons of the joists, the rafters, and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the chimney and chimney way, and the binding joist.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a transposition, if it be a timber-building, of the several terms of groundplates, breast-fummers, and beams. Mill.

GROUND-PLAT. n. f.

1. The ground on which any building is placed.

Wretched Gynecia, where can't thou find any final rest plaf for hope to dwell upon?

2. The ichnography of a building.

GROUND-RENT. n. f. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's ground. A fact.

A foot in front, and thirty-three five sevenths deep, would bring in a ground-rent of five pounds. Arbutnot.

GROUND-ROOM. n. f. A room on the level with the ground. I beseeched him hereafter to meditate in a ground-room; for that otherwise it would be impossible for an artist of any other kind to live near him. Taitler.

GROUNDLESSLY. adv. [from groundless.] Upon firm principles. He hath given the first hint of speaking groundlessly, and to the purpose, upon this subject. Glauville.

GROUNDLESS. n. f. [from ground.] Void of reason; without ground.

But when vain doubt and groundless fear
Do that dear foolish bosom tear. Prior.

We have great reason to look upon the high pretensions which the Roman church makes to miracles as groundless, and to reject their vain and fabulous accounts of them. Sturbury.

He party who distinguish themselves by their zeal for the precat effabishment, should be careful to discover such a reverence for religion, as may shew how groundless that reproach is which is cast upon them, of being averse to our national worship. Frederick, N° 129.

GROUNDLESSLY. adv. [from groundless.] Without reason; without cause; without just reason.

Divers persons have produced the like by spirit of vitriol, or juice of lemons; but have groundlessly ascribed the effect to some peculiar quality of those two liquors. Boyle.

GROUNDLESSNESS. n. f. [from groundless.] Want of just reason.

He durst not cite the words either of my book or sermons, lest the reader should have discovered the notorious falshood and groundlessness of his calumny. Tillotson.

GROUNDING. n. f. [from ground.] A fish which keeps at the bottom of the water; hence one of the low vulgar. Hamm.

It offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious peevish fellow tear a passion to tatters, to vary rags, to split the ears of the grounding. Shakespeare.

GROUNDLY. adv. [from ground.] Upon principles; solidly; not superficially.

A man, groundly learned already, may take much profit himself, in using by epitome to draw other mens works, for his own memory sake, into shorter room. Albam.

GROUNDING. n. f. [from ground and pile, the basis, Sax. perhaps from jella, Latin.] The timber or raised pavement next the ground.

The window-frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame; and all these rabbets, but that on the ground, are grooved square; but the rabbets on the ground is levelled downwards, that rain or snow may the freer fall off. Mason.

GROUNDSEL. n. f. [gencin, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a foliaceous flower, consisting of many florets, divided into several segments sitting on the embryo, contained in an empalement consisting of one leaf, and divided into many parts, afterwards becoming of a conical figure: the embryo afterward becomes a seed, furnished with down; at which time the empalement is reflexed, to make way for the seeds to escape. Miller.

GROUNDWORK. n. f. [from ground and work.]

1. The ground; the first stratum; the first part of the whole; that to which the rest is additional.

A way there is in heav'n's expanded plain,
Which, when the skies are clear, is seen below,
And mortals by the name of milky know;
The groundwork is of flats. Dryden.

2. The first part of an undertaking; the fundamentals.

The main skill and groundwork will be to temper them such lectures and explanations, upon every opportunity, as may lead and draw them in willing obedience. Alston.

3. First principle; original reason.

The groundwork thereof is nevertheless true and certain, however they through ignorance disguise the same, or through vanity. Spenser.

The morals is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction. Dryden.

GROUP. n. f. [groupe, French; gruppo, Italian.] A crowd; a cluster; a huddle; a number thronged together.

In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are less groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same deluge in a more inferior manner. Dryden.

I cannot doubt but the poet had here in view the picture of Zetius, in the famous group of figures which represents the two brothers binding Diocle to the horns of a mad bull. Adair.

You should try your graving tools

On this odious group of loath. Swift.

TO GROUP. v. a. [grouper, French.] To put into a crowd; to huddle together.

The difficulty lies in drawing and disposing, or, as the painters term it, in grouping such a multitude of different objects, preferring still the justness and consistency of style and colouring. Prior.

NO LXV.

GROUSE. n. f. A kind of fowl; a heathcock.

The quires in corn will fly the house
For better game, and look for grouse. Swift.

GROUT. n. f. [grout, Saxon. In Scotland they call it grout.]

1. Coarse meal; pollard.

King Hardknute 'midst Danes and Saxons flour,
Carous'd on nut-brown ale, and din'd on grout;
Which dish its pristine honour still retains,
And when each prince is crown'd in splendor reigns. King.

2. That which purges off.

Sweet honey some condense, some purge the grout;
The rest, in cells apart, the liquid nectar shroud. Dryden.

3. A kind of wild apple. [Agrionolum, Latin.]

TO GROW. v. n. preter. grew; part. pass. grown. [zropan, Saxon; grogen, Dutch.]

1. To vegetate; to have vegetative motion; to encrease by vegetation.

It is not the growing of fruit that nourisheth man; but it is the word which prefereth them. Wisd. xvi. 26.

He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man. Pf. civ. 14.

2. To be produced by vegetation.

Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves. 2 Kings xix. 29.

In this country growth abundance of that wood, which fine is brought into Europe to die red colours. Abbot.

A bag, that groweth in the fields, at the first is hard like a tennis-ball, and white; and after growth of a mushroom-colour, and full of light dust. Bacon.

But say, where grew the tree? from hence how far? Milton.

In colder regions men compose

Poison with art; but here it grows. Waller.

Those tow'rs of oak o'er fertile plains might go,

And visit mountains where they once did grow. Waller.

3. To shoot in any particular form.

Children, like tender others, take the bow;

And as they first are fashion'd, always grow. Dryden.

4. To encrease in stature.

I long with all my heart to see the prince;

I hope he is much grown since last I saw him. Shakespeare.

The poor man had nothing save one little ew-lamb, which he had bought and reared up; and it grew up together with him and with his children. 2 Sam. xii. 3.

Thine own things, and such as are grown up with thee, can't thou not know. 2 Esd. iv. 10.

5. To come to manhood from infancy.

Now the prince groweth fast up to be a man, and is of a sweet and excellent disposition. Bacon.

The main thing to be considered, in every action of a child, is how it will become him when he is bigger, and whither it will lead him when he is grown up. Locke.

We are brought into the world children, ignorant and impotent; and we grow up in vanity and folly. Waller.

6. To issue, as plants from a soil, or as branches from the main trunk.

1. They will seem not stuck into him, but growing out of him. Dryden.

7. To increase in bulk; to become greater, or more numerous.

Bones, after full growth, continue at a stay: as for nails, they grow continually. Bacon.

Then their numbers swell,

And grow upon us. Denham.

'Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train.
He struggles into birth, and cries for aid;
Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid;
He creeps, he walks; and, issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began. Dryden.

These clamours with disdain he heard,
Much grudg'd the praise, but more the rob'd reward. Dryden.
Do not, as some men, run upon the tilt, and call it grace sediments of a grudging uncommunicative disposition. Arbutnot.

Let us consider the ample provision of waters, their use, haunted treasures of the ocean; and though some have grudg'd
the great share that it takes of the surface of the earth, yet we shall propose this too, as a conspicuous mark and character of the wisdom of God. Arbutnot.

I have often heard the Presbyterians say they did not grudge us our employments. Arbutnot.

2. To give or take unwillingly. Arbutnot.

art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty. Shakspeare.

Th' accurs'd Philistia stands on th' other side,
Grumbling aloud, and smiles 'twixt rage and pride. Cowley.
Suitors, all but one, will depart grumbling, because they miss of what they think their due. South.

Providence has allotted man a competency: all beyond it is superfluous; and there will be grumbling without end, if we reckon that we want this, because we have it not. L'Estr.
L'Avare not using half his store,
Still grumbles that he has no more. Prior.

2. To growl; to snarl.
The lion, through he sees the toils are set,
Yet pinch'd with raging hunger scours away;
Hunts in the face of danger all the day;
At night, with fullen pleasure, grumbles o'er his prey. Dryd.

to preserve the Saxon grun.] The groundfill; the lower part of the building.

Next came one
Who mourn'd in earnest, when the captive ark
Maim'd his brute image, head and hands lop'd off
In his own temple, on the grunsel edge,
Where he fell flat, and sham'd his worshippers. Milton.

TO GRUNT, v. n. [grunni, Latin.] To murmur like a hog.

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar and burn,
Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn. Shakspeare.

Lament, ye twine! in gruntings spend your grief;
For you, like me, have lost your sole relief. Gay.

Thy brinded boars may slumber undismay'd,
Or grunt secure beneath the chestnut shade. Tickel.

The folding quean to louder notes doth rise,
To her full pipes the grunting hog replies;
The grunting hogs alarm the neighbours round. Swift.

GRUNT, n. f. [from the verb.] The noise of a hog.
Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
In panick horror of pursuing dogs;
With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,
Poor swine, as if their pretty hearts would break. Dryden.

From hence were heard
The grunts of bristled boars, and groans of bears,
And herds of howling wolves. Dryden.

GRUNTER, n. f. [from grunt.]

TO GRUTCH, v. n. [corrupted for the sake of rhyme from grudge.] To envy; to repine; to be discontented.

The poor at the enclosure doth grutch,
Because of abuses that fall,
Lest some men should have but too much,
And some again nothing at all. Tupper.

But what we're born for we must bear,
Our frail condition it is such,
That what to all may happen here,
It's chance to me, I must not grutch. Ben. Johnson.

GRUTCH, n. f. [from the verb.] Malice; ill-will.
In it he melted leaden bullets,
To shoot at foes, and sometimes pullets;
To whom he bore to sell a grutch,
He ne'er gave quarter t' any such. Hudibras.

By him who is the guerdon of his guile, For so mistaking her true knight to be.

He shall, by the revenging hand, at once receive the guerdon of all his former villanies.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise To scorn delights, and live laborious days;

But the fair guerdon when we hope to find, And think to burst into sudden blaze,

Comes the blind fury with the' abhorred threats, And fits the thin-spun life.

TO GUESS. v. a. [gissjen, Dutch.]

1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principle of judgment.

Incapable and shallow innocents! You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death.

Let not your ears despite my tongue for ever, Which shall possess them with the heavest sound

That ever yet they heard.

—Hum! I guess it at.

Shakespeare.

He that, by reason of his swift motions, can inform himself of all places and preparations, should he not very often guess rightly of things to come, where God pleaseth not to give impediment?

Raleigh.

There issue swarming bands

Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and drefs,

To be 'i' excellent enemies I guess.

Dryden.

The same author ventures to guess at the particular fate which would attend the Roman government.

Swift.

Nor can imagination guess,

How that ungrateful charming maid

My purest passion has betray'd.

Swift.

2. To conjecture rightly.

One may guess by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferior deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himself had a right opinion concerning the true God.

Stillingfleet's Defence of Diss. an. Ram. Idol.

To GUESS. v. a. To hit upon by accident; to determine rightly of anything without certain direction of the judgment.

If Xerxes was able to call every common soldier by his name in his army, it may be guessed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his lessons by heart.

Lacks.

GUESS. n. f. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgment without any positive or certain grounds.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers:

Hard is the guess of their true strength and forces.

His art's like physick, but a happy guess.

Dryden.

It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, before a due examination.

Lacks.

We may make some guess at the distinction of things, into those that are according to, above, and contrary to reason.

Lacks.

This problem yet, this offspring of a guess,

Let us for once a child of truth confess.

Prior.

GUESSER. n. f. [from guess.] Conjecturer; one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good guessers, that the last fit will not be more violent than advantageous.

Pope.

If fortune should please but to take such a croquet,

To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor,

To give thee lawn-sleeves, a mitre and rochet,

Whom would'st thou resemble? I leave thee a guesser.

Swift.

GUESSINGLY. adv. [from guessing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly.

What confederacy have you with the traitors

Late footed in the kingdom?

—I have a letter guessingly set down,

Which came from one that's of a neutral heart,

And not from one oppos'd.

Shakespeare.

GUEST. n. f. [ἀγέτης, γῆτης, Saxon; gwest, Welsh.]

Deacy of Piety.

GUIDE. n. f. [guide, French; from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Judas was a guide to them that took Jesus.

Acts.

Thou gavest them a burning pillar of fire, to be a guide of the unknown journey.

Wisd.

Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance

So far to make us wish for ignorance?

And rather in the dark to grope our way,

Than led by a false guide to err by day?

Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.

While yet but young his father dy'd,

And left him to an happy guide.

Waller.

3. Director; regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature?

In him we live, move and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument: nor is there any such art or knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work.

Hooker, b. i. f. 3.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried,

But we have sure experience for our guide.

GUIDELESS. adv. [from guide.] Without a guide; without a governor or superintendant.

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost,

Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,

To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd.

Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er dufky valleys blow,

Whose every puff bears empire shades away,

Which guideless in those dark dominions stray.

GUIDER. n. f. [from guide.] Director; regulator; guide.

Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us.

That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vitals, opened an imposthume, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so flabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge chance for his chirurgeon, and providence for the guider of his hand.

GUIDON. n. f. [French.] A standardbearer; a standard.

Obsolete.

GUILD. n. f. [gildscip, Saxon, a fellowship, a corporation.]

A society; a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's licence. Hence the common word guild or guild- hall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonality of men gathered into one combination, supporting their common charge by mutual contribution.

Cowel.

Towards three or four o'clock

Look for the news that the guild hall affords.

Shakespeare.

In woollen cloth it appears, by those ancient guilds that were settled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art.

Hale.

As when the long-eared milky mothers wait

At some sick mifer's triple-bolled gate,

For their defrauded abject souls they make

A moan so loud, that all the guild awake.

Pope.

GUILLE. n. f. [guille, guille, old French; the same with guile.]

Deceitful cunning; insidious artifice; the same with guile.

With fawning words he courted her while,

And looking lovely, and oft fighting fore,

Her constant heart did court with divers guile;

But words and looks, and sighs the did abhor.

Spenser.

When I have most need to employ a friend,

Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,

Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,

When I am cold in zeal to you or yours.

Shakespeare.

We may, with more successful hope, resolve

To wage by force or guile eternal war.

Nor thou his malice and false guile condemn:

Subtle he needs must be who could seduce

Angels.

Milton.

GUILFUL. adj. [guile and ful.]

1. Wily; insidious; mischievously artful.

The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guileful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skilful against guile.

Hawes.

Without experience at all.

By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd.

Shakespeare.

He saw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unweeting, seconded Upon her husband. Milton.
The guileful phantom now forsook the shroud,
And flew sublime, and vanish'd in a cloud. Dryden.

GUILER, n. f. [from guile. See BEGUILE.] One that betrays into danger by insidious practices.
But he was wary wife in all his way,
And well perceived his deceitful sleight;
Ne suffered lost his safety to betray;
So goodly did beguile the guiler of the prey. Spenser.
GUILT, n. f. [gilt, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself.]
1. The fate of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.
It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution. Bacon.
When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond.
2. A crime; an offence.
Close pent up guilt
Rive your concealing continents, and ask
These dreadful summoners grace. Shakespeare.
GUILTY, adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence; without clearness of conscience.
Bloody and guilty, guilty awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings, and despair and die. Shakespeare.
GUILTINESS, n. f. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.
He thought his flight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of an humble faithfulness. Sidney.
The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
O, in the battle fought on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness. Shakespeare.
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shakespeare.
GUILTLESS, adj. [from guilt.] Innocent; free from crime.
I am in this commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning. Shakespeare.
Many worthy and chaste dances thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach. Shakespeare.
Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity. Numbers.
Thou, who do'st all thou wilt at thy will,
And never wilt'st aught but what is right,
Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;
Thine be my kingdom. Fairfax.
Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,
Nor knew nor wish'd he, that those vows he made
On his own head should be at last repaid. Dryden.
Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,
When love approach'd me under friendship's name. Pope.
GUILTLESSLY, adv. [from guiltless.] Without guilt; innocently.
GUILTLESSNESS, n. f. [from guiltless.] Innocence; freedom from crime.
A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltlessness is not always with ease oppressed. Sidney.
I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guiltlessness I was better assured than any man living could be. King Charles.
GUILTY, adj. [giltig, Saxon, one condemned to pay a fine for an offence.]
1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.
Is there not a ballad of the king and the beggar?
—The world was guilty of such a ballad some three ages since.
Mark'd you not
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence's death? Shak.
We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he besought us, and we would not hear. Genesis.
With mortal hatred I pursu'd his life,
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife;
Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotence of mind. Dryden.

Farewel the stones
And threshold, guilty of my midnight moans. De-la-
There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man, that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul. Thomson.
2. Wicked; corrupt.
All the tumult of a guilty world,
Toft by ungenerous passions, sick away. Thomson.

GULCH, n. f. [from guile, Latin.] A little gully.
GULCHIN, n. f. Slimmer.
GULES, adj. [perhaps from guile, the throat.] Red: a barbarous term of heraldry.
Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground: gules, gules;
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be?
He whose fable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the knight resemble,
When he laid couched in the ominous horse,
Hath now his dread and black complexion lined
With heraldry more dismal; head to foot,
Now he is total gules.
GULF, n. f. [gulf, Italian.]
1. A bay; an opening into land.
Pisaurius, the Venetian admiral, knowing himself unable to encounter with the Turks great fleet at sea, withdrew himself farther off from the island Corfu, into the gulf of the Adriatic.
2. An abyss; an unmeasurable depth.
Thence turning back, in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavy corse with easy pace
To yawning gulf of deep Avernus' hole;
By that same hole, an entrance dar'd; and bade,
With smother and sulphur hiding all the place,
Descend to hell. Spenser.

GUL

GUN

I know thou'd'st rather Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf,
Than flatter him in a bower. Shakespeare.
This is the gulf through which Virgil's Alecto shoots herself into hell: the fall of waters, the woods that encompass it, are all in the description. Adams.
The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads should turn giddy at the imagination of gaping abysses and unfathomable gulfs? Bentley.
3. A whirlpool; a sucking eddy.
England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf. Shakespeare.
4. Any thing insatiable.
Sculi of dragon, tooth of wolf,
Witches mummy; maw and gulf
Of the ravening fall-sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' th' dark. Shakespeare.
GULLY. adj. [from gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools; voracious.
Rivers arise; whether thou be the fon
Of utmost Tweed, or Oule, or gully Dun. Milton.
At their native realms the Greeks arriv'd,
All who the war of ten long years surviv'd,
And 'scap'd the perils of the gulf main. Pope.
High o'er a gulf sea the Pharian life
Frosts the deep roar of disemboguing Nile. Pope.
5. GULL. v. a. [guller, to cheat, old French.] To trick; to cheat; to defraud; to deceive.
If I do not gu him into a nay word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. Shakespeare.
Yet love these foretories did remove, and move
Thou to gull thine own mother for my love. Donne.
He would have gull'd him with a trick,
But Mart was too too politic. Hudibras.
They are not to be gull'd twice with the same trick. L'Estr.
The Roman people were grossly gull'd twice or thrice over, and as often enslaved in one century, and under the same pretence of reformation. Dryden.
By their designing leaders taught,
The vulgar, gull'd into rebellion, arm'd. Dryden.
For this advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be out-riden, though out-run;
By fortune he was now to Venus triv'd,
And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd:
Of him disposing in his own abode,
He footh'd the goddess, while he gull'd the god. Dryden.
GULL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A sea bird.
2. A cheat; a fraud; a trick.
I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it.
Either they have these excellencies they are praised for, or they have not; if they have not, 'tis an apparent cheat and gull. Government of the Tongue.
3. A stupid animal; one easily cheated.
Being fed by us you us'd us so,
As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo bird,
Useth the sparrow. Shakespeare.
Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious geck and gull
'That e'er invention play'd on. Shakespeare.
'That paltry story is untrue,
And forg'd to cheat such gulls as you. Hudibras.
GULLCATCHER. n. f. [gull and catch.] A cheat; a man of trick; one who catches silly people.

To GULP. v. a. [gelpen, Dutch.] To swallow eagerly; to suck down without intermission.
He loosens the fish, g lps it down, and so soon as ever the morfel was gone wipes his mouth. L'Estrange.
I thirsty stand,
And see the double flaggon charge their hand;
See them puff off the froth, and gulp again,
While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain. Gos.
GULP. n. f. [from the verb.] As much as can be swallowed at once.
In deep suspirations we take more large gulps of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love and sorrow. Mor.
As oft as he can catch a gulp of air,
And peep above the seas, he names the fair. Dryden.
GUM. n. f. [gummi, Latin.]
1. A vegetable substance differing from a resin, in being more viscid and less friable, and generally dissolving in aqueous menstrua; whereas resins, being more sulphurous, require a spirituous solvent. Quincy.
One whole eyes,
Albeit unuse'd to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakespeare.
He ripens spices, fruit, and precious gum,
Which from remotest regions hither come. Waller.
Her maiden train,
Who bore the vests that holy rites require,
Incense, and od'rous gums, and cover'd fire. Dryden.
2. [Goma, Saxon; gumm, Dutch.] The fleshy covering that invests and contains the teeth.
From the babe that milks me
I'd pluck my nipple from his boneless gums. Shakespeare.

How each arising alder now appears,
And o'er the Po distills her gummy tears. Dryden.
2. Productive of gum.
Late the clouds
Juffling, or puff'd with winds, rude in their shock,
Tine the flant light'ning; whose thwart flame driv'n down,
Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine. Milton.
3. Overgrown with gum.
The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays
His lazy limbs and dofy head to raise;
Then rubs his gummy eyes, and scrubs his pate. Dryden.
GUN. n. f. [Of this word there is no satisfactory etymology. Mr. Lye observes that gun in Iceland signifies battle; but when gun came into use we had no commerce with Iceland.] The general name for firearms; the instrument from which shot is discharged by fire.
These dread curses, like the sun's gainst gla's,
Or like an overcharged gun, recoil
And turn upon itself. Shakespeare.
The emperor, smiling, said that never emperor was yet slain with a gun. Kneller.
The bullet flying, makes the gun recoil.
In vain the dart or glitt'ring sword we thrust,
Condemn'd to perish by the slaughter'd gun. Gramville.

Yet cry, if man's unhappy, God's unjust. Pope.

2. Height of perception; height of sensual enjoyment.

They fondly thinking to allay
Their appetite with gust, instead of fruit
Chew'd bitter ashes, which th' offended taste
With spattering noise rejected. Milton.

Where love is duty on the female side,
On theirs meer sensual gust, and fought with fury pride. Dryden's Fables.

My sight, and smell, and hearing were employ'd,
And all three senses in full gust enjoy'd. Dryden.

3. Love; liking.

To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gust;
But, in defence, by mercy 'tis made just. Shakespeare.

Old age shall do the work of taking away both the gust and comfort of them. L'Estrange.

We have lost, in a great measure, the gust and relish of true happiness. Twiss.

4. Turn of fancy; intellectual taste.

The principal part of painting is to find what nature has made most proper to this art, and a choice of it may be made according to the gust and manner of the ancient. Dryden.

5. [From gustler, Icelandic.] A sudden violent blast of wind.

That led calm Henry, though he were a king,
As doth a fail, fill'd with a fretting gust,
Command an argosie to stem the waves. Shakespeare.

You may as well forbid the mountain pine
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are treated with the gusts of heaven's. Shakespeare.

Presently come forth swarms and volleys of which, which are the gusts of liberty of speech restrained. Wickham.

As when fierce northern blasts from th' Alps descend,
From his firm roots with struggling gusts he stands
An aged sturdy oak, the rattling loud Grows loud. Daniel.

Part stay for passage, 'till a gust of wind
Ships o'er their forces in a thinning fleet. Dryden.

Pardon a weak distemper'd soul, that swells
With sudden gusts, and sinks as soon in calm,
The sport of passions. Adison.

6. It is written in Spenser vitiously for gusts, sports.

Full jolly knight he seem'd, and fair did he,
As one for knightly gusts and fierce encounters fit. Spenser.

GU'STABLE, n. f. [gustis, Latin.]

1. To be tasted.

This position informs us of a vulgar error, namely the gall bitter; whereas there is nothing gustable (sweet). Harvey.

GUT, n. f. [kutteln, German.]

1. The long pipe reaching with many convolutions from the stomach to the vent.

This lord wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head.

Reveng'd I will be, as sure as his guts are made of pudding. Shakespeare.

A viol should have a lay of wire-strings below, close to the belly, and then the strings of guts mounted upon a bridge, that by this means the upper strings stricken should make the lower resound. Bacon.

The intestines or guts may be inflamed by any acid or poisonous substance taken inwardly. Acquaviva.

2. The stomach; the receptacle of food; proverbially.

And cramm'd them 'till their guts did ache,
With cawdle, custard, and plum-cake. Hallam.

With false weights their servants guts they cheat, Dryden.
And pinch their own to cover the deceit.

3. Gluttony; love of gormandizing.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy guts bellow
Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou, Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment, Hallam.

In poison'd potion drank't.

TO GUT, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To exsiccate; to draw; to exsiccate.

The fishermen have the most part of their fish: fore and gutted, splitted, powdered and dried. Curtis.

2. To plunder of contents.

In Nero's arbitrary time,
When virtue was a guilt, and wealth a crime, A troop.

A troop of cut-throat guards were sent to seize
The rich men's goods, and gut their palaces. Dryden.
Tom Brown, of facetious memory, after having guttet a proper name of its vowels, used it in his works as free as he pleased. Spectator.

GU'TTATED. adj. [from gutta, Latin, a drop.] Besprikled with drops; bedropped. Dict.

GU'TTER. n. f. [from guttur, a throat, Latin.] A passage for water.

These gutter tiles are in length ten inches and a half. Moxon.
Rocks rise one above another, and have deep gutters worn in the sides of them by torrents of rain. Addison.

To GU'TTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in small hollows.

Tempests themselves, high fens, and howling winds,
The gutter'd rocks, and congregated fands,
Traitors unsteep'd to clog the guiltless keel,
As having sense of beauty, do omit
Their mortal natures, letting safe go by The divine Desdemona. Shakespeare.

My cheeks are gutter'd with my fretting tears. Shakspeare.
First in a place, by nature elove, they build
A narrow flooring, gutter'd, wall'd, and til'd. Dryden.
The gutter'd rocks, and mazy-running clefts. Thomson.

To GU'TTLE. v. n. [from gut.] To feed luxuriously; to gormandize. A low word.

His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and, lavish of expence,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles in his own defence. Dryden.

To GU'TTLE. v. a. [from gut.] To swallow.

The fool spit in his porridge, to try if they'd hiss: they did not hiss, and so he guttled them up, and scalded his chops. L'Estrange.

GU'TTLER. n. f. [from guttle.] A greedy eater.

GU'TTULOUS. adj. [from guttula, Latin.] In the form of a small drop.

Ice is plain upon the surface of the water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air. Brown.

GUTTURAL. adj. [gutturalis, Latin.] Pronounced in the throat; belonging to the throat.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon.

In attempting to pronounce the nasals, and some of the vowels spiritaly, the throat is brought to labour, and makes that which we call a guttural pronunciation. Holder.

GUTTURALNESS. n. f. [from guttural.] The quality of being guttural. Dict.

GU'TWORT. n. f. [gut and wort.] An herb.

rate eater or drinker.

GYNE. n. f. [See GIBE.] A sneer; a taunt; a farcasm.

Ready in gybes, quick answer'd, saucy, and as quarrelous as the weazel. Shakespeare.

To GYBE. v. n. To sneer; to taunt.

The vulgar yield an open ear,

And common courtiers love to gybe and flect. Spenser.

GYMNASTICALLY. adv. [from gymnastick.] Athletically; isually for strong exercise.

Such as with agility and vigour have not the use of either, who are not gymnastically compos'd, nor actively use those parts. Brown.

GYMNASTICK. adj. [gymnasticus; gymnastique, French.]
Pertaining to athletic exercises; consisting of leaping, wrestling, running, throwing the dart, or quoit.

The Creans wisely forbid their servants gymnasticks as well as arms; and yet your modern footmen exercise themselves daily, whilst their enervated lords are softly loling in their chariots. Abulnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

GY'MNICK. adj. [gymnicus; gymnique, French.] Such as practice the athletic or gymnastick exercises.

Have they not iword-players, and e'ry fort

Of gymnick attits, wrestlers, riders, runners. Milton.

GYRA'TION. n. f. [gyra, Latin.] The act of turning any thing about.

This effluviu attenueth and impelleth the neighbouring air, which, returning home, in a gyration carrieth with it the obvious bodies into the electric. Brown.

If a burning coal be nimbly moved round in a circle with gyrations, continually repeated, the whole circle will appear like fire; the reason of which is, that the sensation of the coal in the several places of that circle remains impressed on the sensorium, until the coal return again to the same place. Newt.

GYRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing going in an orbit.

Ne thenceforth his approved skill to ward,
Or strike, or hurlen round in warlike gyre,
Remember'd he; ne car'd for his safe guard,
But rudely rag'd. Spenser.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,
And to the south by thy direction fly?

Or eagle in her gyres the clouds embrace? Sunb.

He fashion'd those harmonious orbs, that roll
In restless gyres about the arctic pole. Sunb.

Quick and more quick he spins in giddy gyres,
Then falls, and in much foam his soul expires. Dryden.

GYVES. n. f. [gyves, Welsh.] Fetters; chains for the legs.

The villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on. Shakespeare.

And knowing this, should I yet flay,

Like such as blow away their lives,

And never will redeem a day,

Enamour'd of their golden gyves? Ben. Jonson.

The poor prisoners, ready to take the occasion offered, boldly starting up, break off their chains and gyves. Kneller.

Dost thou already fingle me? I thought

Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton.

But Telamon rush'd in, and hap'd to meet

A rising root, that held his fasten'd feet;

So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,

His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryden.

To GYVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fetter; to shackle; to enchain; to enslave.

With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do. I will give thee in thine own courtship. Shakespeare.

H.

H A B

H Is in English, as in other languages, a note of aspiration, founded only by a strong omission of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of speech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in English is scarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as house, hebræur: where it is followed by a consonant it has no sound, according to the present pronunciation: but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the syllable guttural; as right, bought.

HA. interj. [ha, Latin.]

1. An expression of wonder, surprise, sudden question, or sudden exertion.

You shall look fairer ere I give or hazard:

What says the golden chest? ha! let me see. Shakespeare.

Ha! what art thou! thou horrid headless trunk!

It is my Haflings!

Rowe.

2. An expression of laughter.

He saith among the trumpets ha, ha, and he smelleth the battle afar off. Joh xxxix. 25.

Ha, ha, 'tis what so long I wish'd and vow'd;

Our plots and delusions

Have wrought such confusions,

That the monarch's a slave to the crowd.

Dryden.

HAAK. n. f. A fish.

Ainsworth.

HABEAS CORPUS. [Latin.] A writ, the which a man indicted of some trespass, being laid in prison for the same, may have out of the King's Bench, thereby to remove himself thither at his own costs, and to answer the cause there.

Cowel.

HABERDASHER. n. f. [This word is ingeniously deduced by Minsheu from habt ihr dasei, German, have you this, the expression of a shopkeeper offering his wares to sale.] One who sells small wares; a pedlar.

Because these cunning men are like haberdashers of small wares, it is not amiss to set forth their shop.

Bacon.

A haberdasher, who was the oracle of the coffeehouse, declared his opinion.

Addison.

HABERDINE. n. f. A dried salt cod.

Ainsworth.

You take the sum and substance that I have. Shakespeare.

The clergy should content themselves with wearing gowns and other habiliments of Irish drapery.

Swift.

TO HABILITATE. v. n. [habilitier, French.] To qualify; to entitle.

Divers persons in the house of commons were attainted, and thereby not legal, nor habilitate to serve in parliament, being disabled in the highest degree.

Bacon.

HABILITATION. n. f. [from habilitate.] Qualification.

The things formerly spoken of, are but habilitations towards arms; and what is habilitation without intention and act? Bacon.

HABILITY. n. f. [habilitie, French.] Faculty; power.

HABIT. n. f. [habitus, Latin.]

1. State of any thing: as, habit of body.

2. Dreß; accoutrement.

I shifted

Into a madman's rage, I assume a semblance

The very dogs disdain'd; and in this habit

Met I my father.

Shakespeare.

H A B

If you have any justice, any pity;
If ye be any thing, but churchmen's habits. Shakespeare.
Both the poets being dressed in the same English habits, story compared with story, judgment may be made without them.

The scenes are old, the habits are the same
We wore last year.

There are among the statues several of Venus, in habits. Dryden.

The clergy are the only set of men who wear a habit habit from others.

3. Habit is a power or ability in man of doing anything, when it has been acquired by frequent doing the same thing. Locke.

He hath a better bad habit of frowning than the court

Palatine.

4. Custom; inveterate use.

This is the last fatal step but one, which is, by frequent repetition of the sinful act, to continue and persevere in it, till at length it settles into a fixed confirmed habit of sin, which being properly that which the apostle calls the enslaving sin, ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but also as to actual infliction. Scott.

No civil broils have since his death arose,

But faction now by habit does obey;

And wars have that respect for his repose,

As winds for halcyons when they breed at sea. Dryden.

The force of education is so great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what shape we please, and give the impressions of such habits as shall ever afterwards remain. Locke.

TO HA'BIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress; to accoutre; to array.

Present yourself and your fair princely

Before Leontes:

She shall be habited as it becomes

The partner of your bed. Shakespeare.

They habited themselves like those rural deities, yet imitated them in their rustic dances. Dryden.

HABITABLE. adj. [habitable, Fr. habitabilis, Lat.] Capable of being dwelt in; capable of sustaining human creatures.

By means of our solitary situation, we know well not part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown. Bacon.

That was her torrid and inflaming time;

This is her habitable tropic clime. Locke.

Look round the habitable world, how few

Know their own good, or knowing it, pursue. Dryden.
HABITABLENESS. n. f. [from habitabile.] Capacity of being dwelt in.

The cutting of the Equinoctial line decides the convexity of the habitableness of the torrid zone. Mor.

Those ancient problems of the spherical roundness of the earth, the being of antipodes, and of the habitableness of the torrid zone, are abundantly demonstrated. Locke.

HABITANCE. n. f. [habitation, Latin.] Dwelling; abode.

What art thou, man, if man at all thou art,

That here in desert hast thine habitation?

And these rich heaps of wealth do'll hide apart

From the world's eyes, and from her right habitation. Spenser.

HABITANT. n. f. [habitant, Fr. habitant, Latin.] Dweller; one that lives in any place; inhabitant.

Not to earth are those bright luminaries

Officious; but to the earth's habitant;

And for the heav'n's wide circuit, let it speak

The maker's high magnificence. Milton.

Powers celestial to each other's view

Stand still and confest, though distant far they lie,

On habitants of earth, or sea, or sky. Pope.

HABITATION. n. f. [habitation, French; habitation, Latin.] 1. The act of dwelling, the state of a place residing dwellers. Angell.

For want of habitation and repair,
Dissolve to heaps of ruins.

Derham.

Rocks and mountains, which in the first ages were high and craggy, and consequently then inconvenient for habitation, were, by continual deterioration, brought to a lower pitch.

Woodward.

2. Place of abode ; dwelling.

Wisdom, to the end she might save many, built her house of that nature which is common unto all ; she made not this or that man her habitation, but dwelt in us.

God oft defends to visit men

Hesker.

Unseen, and through their habitations walks
To mark their doings.

Milton.

HABITATOR. n. f. [Latin.] Dweller ; inhabitant.

So is his presence more continued unto the northern inhabitants ; and the longest day in Cancer is longer unto us than that in Capricorn unto the southern habitatori.

Brown.

HABITUAL. adj. [habituel, from habit, French.] Customary ; accustomed ; inveterate ; established by frequent repetition.

Sin, there in pow'r before

Once actual ; now in body, and to dwell

Habitual habitant.

Milton.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims.

Saunders.

By length of time

The scurf is worn away of each committed crime :
No speck is left of their habitual stains ;

But the pure ether of the soul remains.

Dryden.

'Tis impossible to become an able artist, without making your art habitual to you.

Dryden.

HABITUALLY. adv. [from habitual.] Customarily ; by habit.
Internal graces and qualities of mind sanctify our natures, and render us habitually holy.

Atterbury.

TO HABITUATE. v. a. [habituere, French.] To accustom ;
to use one's self by frequent repetition.

Men are first corrupted by bad counsel and company, and next they habituate themselves to their vicious practices. Tillet.
Such as live in a rarer air are habituated to the exercise of a greater muscular strength.

Arbutnot.

HABITUDE. n. f. [habitude, Latin ; habitude, French.]
1. Relation ; respect ; state with regard to something else.

We cannot conclude this complexion of nations from the vicinity or habitude they hold unto the sun.

Brown.

The will of God is like a straight unalterable rule ; but the various compartments of the creature, either thwarting this rule, or holding conformity to it, occasions several habitudes of this rule into it.

Hale.

It results from the very nature and being of things, as they stand in such a certain habitude, or relation to one another.

Saunders.

As by the objective part of perfect happiness we understand that which is best and last, and to which all other things are to be referred ; so by the formal part must be understood the best and last habitude of man toward that best object.

In all the habitudes of life.

The friend, the mistress, and the wife ;
Variety we still pursue.

Swift.

2. Familiarity ; converse ; frequent intercourse.

His knowledge in the noblest useful arts,
Was such dead authors could not give ;

But habitudes with those who live ;
To write well, one must have frequent habitudes with the best company.

Dryden.

3. Long custom ; habit ; inveterate use.

Dryden.

Mankind is not more liable to deceit than willing to continue in a pleasing error, strengthened by a long habitude.

Dryden.

Thy ear inur'd to charitable sounds,
And pitying love, must feel the hateful wounds
Of jest obscene, and vulgar ribaldry.

The ill-bred question, and the loud reply,
Brought by long habitude from bad to worse ;
Must hear the frequent oath, the direful curse.

Prior.

4. The power of doing any thing acquired by frequent repetition.

It is impossible to gain an exact habitude, without an infinite number of acts and perpetual practice.

Dryden.

HABITUALLY. adv. [hap ne hap, or nap ; as would ne would, will ne will ; that is, let it happen or not.] At random ; at the mercy of chance ; without any rule or certainty of effect.

He circles draws and squares,
With cyphers, astral characters ;
Then looks 'em o'er to understand 'em,
Although set down habitu at random.

Hudibras.

fancy of omens, tales, and visions! L'Estrange.

HAGGARD. adj. [hagard, French.]

1. Wild; untamed; irclaimable.
To let them down before that his flights end,
As hagard hawk, presuming to contend
With hardy fowl above his able might,
His weary pounces all in vain do spend,
To trust the prey too heavy for his flight. Spenser.

2. [Hagard, German.] Lean. To this sense I have put the following passage; for so the author ought to have written.
A hagard carion of a wolf, and a jolly sort of a dog, with good flesh upon's back, fell into company together. L'Estr.

3. [Hag, Welsh.] Ugly; rugged; deformed; wildly disordered.
She's too disdainful
I know her spirits are as coy and wild,
As hagard as the rock. Shakespeare.

Fearful besides of what in fight had pass'd,
His hands and hagard eyes to heav'n he cast. Dryden.
Where are the conscious looks, the face now pale,
Now flushing red, the down-cast hagard eyes,
Or fixt on earth, or flowly rais'd! Smith.

HAGGARD. n. f.
1. Any thing wild or irclaimable.

- I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days pass, which has as long lov'd me,
As I have lov'd this proud disdainful hagard. Shakespeare.

2. A species of hawk.
Does the wild hagard tow'r into the sky,
And to the fourth by thy direction fly? Samlys.

shall hail, coming down on the forest. Is. xxxiii. 19.

HAIL. interj. [Evel, health, Saxon: hail, therefore, is the same as salve of the Latins, or ὑγιαίνω of the Greeks, health be to you.] A term of salutation now used only in poetry; health be to you.

Hail, hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil
As thou dost leave it.

Her sick head is bound about with clouds:
It does not look as it would have a hail
Or health with'd in it, as on other morn. Ben. Jon.

The angel hail
Beslow'd, the belial salutation us'd
Long after to blest Mary, second Eve.

Farewel, happy fields,
Where joy forever dwells! hail horrors! hail
Infernal world! and thou profoundest hell
Receive thy new possessor!

All hail, he cry'd, thy country's grace and love;
Once first of men below, now first of birds above. Dryden.
Hail to the sun! from whose returning light
The cheerful soldier's arms new lustre take,
To deck the pomp of battle.

HAIR. n. f. [hæir, Saxon.]

1. One of the common teguments of the body, it is refined upon all the parts of the body, except the sole of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hair with a microscope, we find that they have each a round fibrous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: the each hair consists of five or six others, wrapped up in a common eyent or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part of the root thrusting forward that which is immediately above, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as some suppose.

2. A single hair.

My fleece of woolly hair uncurls. Shakespeare.
Shall the difference of hair only, on the skin, be a mark of a different internal constitution between a chameleon and a drill? Lin.

Her beauty, in thy sister half
Bury'd and lost, she ought to grieve. Prior.
Natural was it for a prince, who had propos'd to himself the empire of the world, not to neglect the sea, the half of his dominions. Arbutnot.

2. It sometimes has a plural signification when a number is divided.

Had the land fellest of the best,
Half had come hence, and let the world provide the rest. Dryden.

3. It is much used in composition to signify a thing imperfect, as the following examples will show.

HALF. adv. In part; equally.
I go with love and fortune, two blind guides,
To lead my way; half loth, and half contenting. Dryden.

HALF-BLOOD. n. f. One not born of the same father and mother.

Which shall be heir of the two male twins, who, by the dissection of the mother, were laid open to the world? whether a sifter by the half-blood shall inherit before a brother's daughter by the whole-blood? Locke.

HALF-BLOODED. adj. [half and blood.] Mean; degenerate.
The let alone lies not in your good will.
—Nor in thine, lord.

—Half-blooded fellow, yes. Shakespeare.
HALF-CAP. n. f. Cap imperfectly put off, or faintly moved.

After distasteful looks, and these hard fractions,
With certain half-caps and cold moving nods,
They froze me into silence. Shakespeare.

HALF-ENDED. n. f. [half and end, Saxon.] Part. Spenser.
HALF-FACED. adj. [half and fac'd.] Showing only part of the face; small faced.

Proud incroaching tyranny
Burns with revenging fire, whose hopeful colours
Advance, a half-fac'd fawn striving to shine. Shakespeare.

This same half-fac'd fellow, Shadow; give me this man: he presents no mark to the enemy: the foeman may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife. Shakespeare.

HALF-HATCHED. adj. [half and hatch.] Imperfectly hatched.
Here, thick as hailstones pour,
Turnips, and half-hatch'd eggs, a mingled show'r,
Among the rabble rain. Gay.

HALF-HEARD. adj. Imperfectly heard; not heard to an end.
Not added years on years my task could close;
Back to thy native islands might'st thou sail,
And leave half-heard the melancholy tale. Pope.

HALF-MOON. n. f.
1. The moon in its appearance when at half increase or decrease.

2. Any thing in the figure of a half moon.
See how in warlike muster they appear.
In rhombos and wedges, and half-moon and wings. Milton.

HALF-PENY. n. f. plural half-pence. [half and peny.] A copper coin, of which two make a penny.

There shall be in England seven half-penny leaves sold for a penny.

Baroldph stole a lute-case, bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three half-pence. Shakespeare.

I thank you; and sure, dear friend, my thanks are too dear of a half-penny. Shakespeare.

He cheats for half-pence, and he doth his coat
To fave a farthing in a ferryboat. Dryden.
Never admit this pernicious coin, no not so much as one single half-penny. Swift.

You will wonder how Wood could get his majesty's broad feal for so great a sum of bad money, and that the nobility here could not obtain the same favour, and make our own half-pence as we used to do. Swift.

HALF PIKE. n. f. [half and pike.] The small pike carried by officers.

The various ways of paying the salute with the half-pike. Tatler.

HALF-PINT. n. f. [half and pint.] The fourth part of a quart.

One half-pint bottle serves them both to dine;
And is at once their vinegar and wine. Pope.

HALF-SCHOLAR. n. f. Imperfectly learned.

We have many half-scholars now-a-days, and there is much confusion and incontinuity in the notions and opinions of some persons. Watts.

HALF-SEAS OVER. A proverbial expression for any one far advanced. It is commonly used of one half drunk.

I am half-seas over to death;
And since I must die once, I would be loth

To make a double work of what's half finish'd. Dryden.

HALF-SIGHTED. adj. [half and sight.] Seeing imperfectly;
having weak discernment.

The officers of the king's household had need be provident, both for his honour and thrift: they must look both ways, else they are but half-sighted. Bacon.

HALF-SPHERE. n. f. [half and sphere.] Hemisphere.

Let night grow blacker with thy plots; and day,
At shewing but thy head forth, start away

From this half-sphere. Ben. Jonson.

HALF-STRAINED. adj. [half and strain.] Half-bred; imperfect.

I find I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet,
But mungil-mitchievous; for my blood boil'd

To view this brutal act. Dryden.

HALF-SWORD. n. f. Close fight; within half the length of a sword.

I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. Shakespeare.

HALF-WAY. adv. [half and way.] In the middle.

Fearless he was, who is with virtuous crown'd,
The tempest rage, and hears the thunder found;

Ever the flame, let fortune smile or frown:
Serenely as he liv'd resigns his breath;

Meets destiny half-way, nor shrinks at death. Granville.

HALF-WIT. n. f. [half and wit.] A blockhead; a foolish fellow.

Half-wits are fleas, so little and so light,
We scarce could know they live, but that they bite. Dryden.

HALF-WITTED. adj. [from half-wit.] Imperfectly furnished with understanding.

I would rather have trusted the refinement of our language, as to found, to the judgment of the women than of halfwitted poets. Swift.

Jack had passed for a poor, well-meaning, half-witted, crack-brained fellow; people were strangely surpris'd to find him in such a regency. Arbutnot.

HALIBUT. n. f. A sort of fish.

HALIDOM. n. f. halidom, holy judgment, or palg and dame, for lady.] Our blessed lady.

By my halidom, quoth he,
Ye a great matter are in your degree. Spenser.

HALIMAS. n. f. [halix and mas.] The feast of All-souls.

My queen to France; from whence forth I sent in pomp,
She came adorned hither like sweet May;

Sent back like halimasi, or shortest day. Shakespeare.

HALITIOUS. adj. [halitus, Latin.] Vaporous; fumes.

We speak of the atmosphere as of a peculiar thin and halit-ious liquor, much lighter than spirit of wine. Boyle.

HALL. n. f. [pal, Saxon; hulle, Dutch.]

1. A court of justice.

2. A manour-house so called, because in it were held courts for the tenants.

Captain Sentry, my master's nephew, has taken possession of the hall house, and the whole estate. Addison.

3. The public room of a corporation.

With expedition on the beadle call,
To summon all the company to the hall.

4. The first large room of a house.

That light we see is burning in my hall. Shakespeare.

Courtly is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky ritters, than in tapstry halls

And coats of pinnets. Milton.

HALLELUJAH. n. f. [הללויה] Praise ye the Lord. A song of thanksgiving.

Then shall thy saints
Unsain'd hallelujahs to thee sing,
Hymns of high praise. Milton.

Singing those devout hymns and heavenly anthems, in which the church militant seems ambitiously to emulate the triumphant, and echo back the solemn praises and hallelujahs of the celestial choirs. Boyle.

HALLOO. interj. [The original of this word is controversial:
some imagine it corrupted from à lui, to him; others from allens, let us go! and Stimmer from haller, to draw.] A word of encouragement when dogs are let loose on their game.

Some popular chief,
More noisy than the rest, but cries hallo,

And, in a trice, the following herd come out. Dryden.

To HALLOO. v. n. [haler, Fr.] To cry as after the dogs.

A number of country folks halloed and hoisted after me, as at the arrantest coward that ever shewed his shoulders to his enemy. Steele.

A cry more tuneable,
Was never halloed to, nor cheer'd with horn. Steele.

To HALLOO. v. a.

1. To encourage with shouts.

If, whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his hunting-horn and pole,

Though gout and age his speed detain,
Old John halloos his hounds again. Pear.

2. To chafe with shouts.

If I fly, Marcias,
Halloo me like a hare. Shelton.

3. To call or shout to.

When we have found the king, he that fast looks on him, halloo the other. Shelton.

To HALLOW. v. a. [*palg*ian, palg, Saxon, holy.]

1. To consecrate; to make holy.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, it is only to signify that we make them places of public resort, that we ascribe God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Blau.

With us it cannot be endured to hear a man speak that he putteth fire to his neighbour's house, but yet to hallow the same with prayer, that he expect it shall burn. Blau.

Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor!
Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed.

And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead. Shake.

My prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes

More worth than vanities; yet pray'rs and wishes
Are all I can return. Shakespeare.

And from work
Now resting, blest'd and hallow'd the seventh day,
As resting on that day from all his works,

But not in sanctity holy kept. Milton.

Then banish'd faith shall once again return,
And vestal fires in hallow'd temples burn.

No satyr lurks within this hallow'd ground;
But nymphs and heroines, kings and gods abound. Gran.

2. To reverence as holy; as, hallow'd be thy name.

HALLUCINATION. n. f. [hallucinatio, Latin.] Error; blaz-der; mistake; folly.

A walling of flesh, without cause, is frequently termed a bewitched disease; but unquestionably a mere hallucination of the vulgar. Horne.

This must have been the hallucination of the transcriber, who probably mistook the date of the I for a T. Key.

HALM. n. f. [psalm, Saxon.] Siraw. Pronounced harm.

HALO. n. f. A red circle round the sun or moon.

And, if the hail be a little flatted, the light transmitted grow to fringes, at a little less distance than that of seven-six degrees, as to form a halo about the sun or moon; which rays as often as the hailstones are duly figured, may be viewed. Nature's Opt.

I saw by reflection, in a vessel of flagging wine, three halo's, crowns or rings of colours about the sun, like three little rainbows, concentric to his body. Nature's Opt.

HALSING. adj. [hal, German; hals, Scottish, the neck.]

Sounding harshly; inharmonious in the throat or voice.

This ill halsing horny name hath, as Cornus in Italy, opened a gap to the scoffs of many. Corn.

HALSER. n. f. [from hals, neck, and seel, a rope. It is now in marine pronunciation corrupted to halsey.] A rope less than a cable.

A beechen mast then in the hollow bafe
They hoisted, and with well-wreath'd halseys beite Chapman.

Their white sails.

No halseys need to bind these vessels here,
Nor bearded anchors; for no storms they fear. Dryden.

To HALT. v. n. [pealte, Saxon, lame; pealtan, to limp.]

1. To limp; to be lame.

And will the yet debate her eyes
On me, that halt and am mis-shapen thus? Shakespeare.

Thus inborn broils the factions would engage,
Or wars of civil heirs, or foreign rage. Dryden.

I'll haling vengeance overtook our age.
Spenser himself affects the obsolete, Pope.

And Sidney's verse hals ill on Roman feet. Shelton.

2. To stop in a march.

I was forced to halt in this perpendicular march. Shelton.

3. To hesitate; to stand dubious. Shelton.

How long halt ye between two opinions?

4. To fail; to falter.

Here's a paper written in his hand;

A b-ling sonnet of his own pure brain;

Fashion'd to Beatrice.

All my familiars watched for my halting, saying, peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him. Jer.

HALT, adj. [from the verb.] Lame; crippled.

Bring in hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind.

HALT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of limping; the manner of limping.

2. [Alt, French.] A stop in a march.

The heav'nly hands

Down from a sky of jasper lighted now

In Paradise, and on a hill made halt.

Scouts each coast light armed four

Each quarter to defy the distant foe,

Where lodg'd, or whether fled, or if for fight

In motion, or in halt.

Without any halt they marched between the two armies.

He might have made a halt 'till his foot and artillery came up to him.

HALTER, n. f. [from halt.] He who limps.

HALTER, n. f. [pealrype, Saxon, from hal, the neck.]

1. A rope to hang malefactors.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield,

And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,

Expect your highness' doom of life or death.

Answer was made, it was by the sword if they stood upon defence, and by the halter if they yielded; wherefore they made choice to die rather as soldiers than as dogs.

We're I a drowsy judge, whose dismal note

Di'georgeth halters, as a juggler's throat

Dash ribbends.

When the times begin to alter,

None rise so high as from the halter.

He gets renown, who, to the halter near,

But narrowly escapes, and buys it dear.

2. A cord; a strong lining.

Whom neither halter binds nor burthens charge.

TO HALTER, v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a cord;

to catch in a noose.

He might have employed his time in the frivolous delights of catching moles and haltering frogs.

TO HALVE, v. a. [from half, halver.] To divide into two parts.

HALVES, intrj. [from half, halver, being the plural.] An expression by which any one lays claim to an equal share.

Have you not seen how the divided dam

Runs to the summits of her hungry lamb?

But when the twin cries halver, she quits the first.

HAM, whether initial or final, is no other than the Saxon ham, a house, farm, or village.

HAM, n. f. [ham, Saxon; hamer, Dutch.]

1. The hip; the hinder part of the articulation of the thigh with the knee.

The ham was much relaxed; but there was some contraction remaining.

2. The thigh of a hog fatted.

Who has not learn'd, fresh sturgeon and hampie

Are no rewards for want and infamy.

HA'MATED, adj. [hamatus, Latin.] Hooked; set with hooks.

TO HA'MBLE, v. a. [from ham.] To cut the sinews of the thigh; to hamstring.

HAME, n. f. [hama, Saxon.] The collar by which a horse draws in a wagon.

HAMLET, n. f. [ham, Saxon, and let, the diminutive termination.] A small village.

Within the self-same lordship, parish, or hamlet, lands have divers degrees of value.

He pitch'd upon the plain

His mighty camp, and, when the day return'd,

The country waited and the hamlets burn'd.

HAMMER, n. f. [hamer, Saxon; hammer, Danish.]

1. The instrument consisting of a long handle and heavy head, with which any thing is forged or driven.

The armourers,

With busy hammers closing rivets up,

Give dreadful note of preparation.

The stuff will not work well with a hammer.

It is broken not without many blows, and will break the best anvils and hammers of iron.

Every morning he rises fresh to his hammer and his anvil.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke.

2. Any thing destructive.

That renowned pillar of truth and hammer of heresies, St.

Augustine.

TO HAMMER, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a hammer,

1 King.

His bones the hammer'd steel in strength surpasse. Samyls.

2. To forge or form with a hammer.

Some hammer helmets for the fighting field. Dryden.

Drugg'd like a smith, and on the anvil beat,

'Till he had hammer'd out a vast estate. Dryden.

3. To work in the mind; to contrive by intellectual labour.

Will thou still be hammering treachery,

To humble down thy husband and thyself?

He was no body that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this wicraft, and picture it accordingly. Camden.

Some spirits, by whom they were flirred and guided in the name of the people, hammered up the articles. Hayward.

TO HAMMER, v. n.

1. To work; to be busy.

Nor need'st thou much importune me to that,

Whereon his month I have been hammering.

I have been studying how to compare

This prison where I live unto the world;

And, for because the world is populous,

And here is not a creature but myself,

I cannot do it; yet I'll hammer on't.

2. To be in agitation.

Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand;

Blood and revenge are hammering in my head.

HAMMERER, n. f. [from hammer.] He who works with a hammer.

HAMMERHARD, n. f. [hammer and hard.]

Hammerhard is when you harden iron or steel with much hammering on it.

HAMMOCK, n. f. [hamaca, Saxon.] A swinging bed.

Prince Maurice of Nassau, who had been accustomed to hammocks, used them all his life.

HAMPER, n. f. [Supposed by Minsheu to be contracted from hand panier; but hamper appears to have been a word long in use, whence hamper, hamper.] A large basket for carriage.

What powder'd wigs! what flames and darts!

What hampers full of bleeding hearts.

TO HAMPER, v. a. [The original of this word, in its present meaning, is uncertain: Junius observes that hamper in Teu-tonick is a quarrel: others imagine that hamper or hampier, being the treasury to which fines are paid, to hamper, which is commonly applied to the law, means originally to fine.]

1. To shackle; to entangle in chains!

O loose this frame, this knot of man untie!

That my free soul may use her wing,

Which now is pinion'd with mortality,

As an entangl'd, hamper'd thing.

We shall find such engines to assail,

And hamper thee, as thou shalt come of force.

What was it but a lion *hampe*d in a net!

They hamper and entangle our souls, and hinder their flight upwards.

2. To ensnare; to inveigle; to catch with allurements.

She'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby.

Wear under vizard-masks their talents,

And mother wits before their gallants;

Until they're hamper'd in the noose,

Too fast to dream of breaking loose.

3. To complicate; to tangle.

Engend'ring heats, these one by one unwind,

Stretch their small tubes, and hamper'd nerves unwind.

4. To perplex; to embarrass by many lets and troubles.

And when th' are hamper'd by the laws,

Release the lab'rs for the cause.

HAMSTRING, n. f. [ham and string.] The tendon of the ham.

A strutting player, whose conceit

Lies in his hamstring, doth think it rich

To hear the wooden dialogue, and sound

'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage.

On the hinder side it is guarded with the two hamstrings.

Wise man's Surgery.

TO HAMSTRING, v. a. preter. and part. pass. hamstrung. [from the noun.] To lame by cutting the tendon of the ham.

Hamstring'd behind, unhappy Gyges dy'd;

Then Phalaris is added to his side.

HAN for hane, in the plural.

HANAPER, n. f. [hanaperium, low Latin.] A treasury; an exchequer. The clerk of the hanaper receives the fees due to the king for the feal of charters and patents.

The fines for all original writs were wont to be immediately paid into the hanaper of the Chancery.

HANCES, n. f. [In a ship.] Falls of the file-rails placed on bannisters on the poop and quarter-deck down to the gangway.

HANCES. [In architecture.] The ends of elliptical arches; and these are the arches of smaller circles than the scheme, or middle part of the arch.

The sweep of the arch will not contain above fourteen inches, and perhaps you must cement pieces to many of the courses in the hance, to make them long enough to contain fourteen inches.

HAND. n. f. [pans, ponds, Saxon, and in all the Teutonic dialects.]

1. The palm with the fingers; the member with which we hold or use any instrument.

They laid hands upon him, and bound him hand and foot.
Keeler's History of the Turks.

So hand in hand they pass'd, the loveliest pair
That ever since in love's embraces met. Milton.

Thy hand in hand, with wandering steps and flow,
Through Eden took their solitary way. Milton.

That wonderful instrument the hand, was it made to be idle?
Berkley.

6. Ready payment with regard to the payer.
Let not the wages of any man tarry with thee, but give it him out of hand. Job.

7. Rate; price.
Time is the measure of business, as money of wares; business is bought at a dear hand, where there is small dispatch. Bacon, Essay 26.

8. Terms; conditions.
With simplicity admire and accept the mystery; but at no hand by pride, ignorance, interest, or vanity wrest it to ignoble senses. Taylor.

It is either an ill sign or an ill effect, and therefore at no hand consistent with humility. Taylor.

9. Act; deed; external action.
Thou sawest the contradiction between my heart and hand. King Charles.

10. Labour; act of the hand.
Alnaschar was a very idle fellow, that never would set his hand to any business during his father's life. Aladdin.

I rather suspect my own judgment than I can believe a fault to be in that poem, which lay so long under Virgil's correction, and had his last hand put to it. Aladdin.

11. Performance.
Where are these porters,
These lazy knaves? Y'ave made a fine band! fellows,
There's a trim rabble let in. Shakespeare.

12. Power of performance.
Will Honeycomb has told me, that he had a great mind to try his hand at a Spectator, and that he would fain have one of his writing in my works. Aladdin.

A friend of mine has a very fine band on the violin. Addison's Guardian.

13. Attempt; undertaking.
Out of them you dare take in hand to lay open the original of such a nation. Spenser.

14. The manner of gathering or taking.
As her majesty hath received great profit, so may she, by a moderate hand, from time to time reap the like. Bacon.

15. Workmanship; power or act of manufacturing or making.
An intelligent being, coming out of the hands of infinite perfection, with an aversion or even indifference to be reunited with its Author, the source of its utmost felicity, is such a shock and deformity in the beautiful analogy of things, as is not consistent with finite wisdom and perfection. Chapman.

16. Manner of acting or performing.
The master saw the madnels rise;
His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes;
And while he heav'n and earth defy'd,
Chang'd his hand, and check'd his pride. Dryden.

17. Agency; part in action.
God must have set a more than ordinary esteem upon that which David was not thought fit to have an hand in. South.

18. The act of giving or presenting.

To-night the poet's advocate I stand,
And he deserves the favour at my hand. Addison.

19. Act of receiving any thing ready to one's hand, when it only waits to be taken.
His power reaches no farther than to compound and divide the materials that are made to his hand; but can do nothing towards the making or destroying one atom of what is already in being. Locke.

Many, whose greatness and fortune were not made to their hands, had sufficient qualifications and opportunities of rising to these high posts.

20. Care; necessity of managing.
Jupiter had a farm a long time upon his hand, for want of a tenant to come up to his price. Lucian.

When a statesman wants a day's defence,
Or envy holds a whole week's war with itself,
Or simple pride for flattery makes demands,
May dunces by dunces be whiffed off my hands. Pope.

21. Discharge of duty.
Let it therefore be required, on both parts, at the hand of the clergy, to be in means of efface like the apostles; at the hand of the laity, to be as they who lived under the apostles. Hooker.

22. Reach; nearness; as, at hand, within reach, near, approaching.
Your husband is at hand, I hear his trumpet. Shakespeare.

Cousins, I hope the days are near at hand.
That chambers will be safe. Shakespeare.

He is at hand, and Fintarus is come
To do you salutation. Shakespeare.

The fight of his mind was like some lights of eyes, rather strong at hand than to carry afar off.

Any light thing that moveth, when we find no wind, breath a wind at hand. Bacon.

A very great sound near hand hath stricken many dead. Bacon's New History.

as, the pot hangers.

HA'NGER. n. f. [from hang.] A short broad sword.

HA'NGER-ON. n. f. [from hang.] A dependant; one who eats and drinks without payment.

If the wife or children were absent, their rooms were supplied by the umbrella, or hanger-on. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

They all excused themselves save two, which two he reckoned his friends, and all the rest hanger-on. L'Estrange.

He is a perpetual hanger-on, yet nobody knows how to be without him. Swift.

HA'NGING. n. f. [from hang.] Drapery hung or fastened against the walls of rooms by way of ornament.

A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,

Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves,

And left me bare to weather. Shakespeare.

Like rich hangings in an homely house,

So was his will in his old feeble body. Shakespeare.

Being informed that his breakfast was ready, he drew towards the door, where the hangings were held up. Clarendon.

Now purple hangings cloath the palace walls,

And sumptuous seals are made in splendid halls. Dryden.

Lucas Van Leyden has infected all Europe with his designs for tapestry, which, by the ignorant, are called ancient hang- ings. Dryden.

Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,

With prompting priest behind the hangings. Prior.

HA'NGING. participial adv. [from hang.]

1. Foreboding death by the halter.

Surely, sir, a good favour you have; but that you have a hanging look. Shakespeare.

What Ethiops lips he has!

How foul a snout, and what a hanging face! Dryden.

2. Requiring to be punished by the halter.

HA'NGMAN. n. f. [hang and man.] The public executioner.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows; in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, and in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney.

One cried, God bless us! and amen! the other;

As they had seen me with these hangman's hands;

Liftening their fear, I could not say amen,

When they did say God bless us. Shakespeare.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. Shakespeare.

Who makes that noise there? Who are you?

—Your friend, sir, the hangman: you must be so good, fir, to rise, and be put to death. Shakespeare.

Men do not stand.

In so ill case, that God hath with his hand

Sign'd kings blank charters to kill whom they hate;

Nor are they vicars, but hangmen to fate. Denne.

I never knew a critick, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself;

as the hangmen is generally a worse malefactor than the criminal that suffers by his hand. Addison.

HA'NG. n. f. [hang, hollandick, a chain or coil of rope.]

1. A skein of thread.

2. A tie; a check; an influence. A low word.

Do we think we have the bank that some gallants have in their trusting merchants, that, upon peril of losing all fortunes scores, he must still go on to supply? Deasy of P.
To HA'NGER. v. n. [hanger, Dutch.] To hang upon nately; to have an inefficient will.

And now the faints began their reign,
For which th' had yearn'd so long in vain,
And felt such bowel hangering,
To see an empire all of kings.

Among women and children, care it is to be taken that get not a hangering after these juggling astrologers and fortune-tellers. Urbano.

The shepherd would be a merchant, and the merchant
hangering after something else. Urbano.

Do! thou not hanger after a greater liberty in loose living!

If not, there's no better sign of a good resolution. Urbano.

The wife is an old equitee, that is always hangering after the diversions of the town. Urbano.

The republick that fell under the subjection of the duke of Florence, still retains many hangering after in access to liberty. Urbano.

HA'NT, for has not, or have not.

That rogues'leet of yours makes a pretty woman's heart

ake: you haunt that limper about the mouth for nothing. Urbano.

HAP. n. f. [happ, in Welch, is misfortune.]

1. Chance; fortune.

Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth see chance to think well of cannot still have the like. Urbano.

Whether art it were, or heedless hap,

As through the flowing' forest rash the boat,

In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did blow,

And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did ensue. Urbano.

A fox had the hap to fall into the walk of a lion. Urbano.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.

Curst be good haps, and curst be they that had

Their hopes on haps, and do not make despair

For all these certain blows the forest find. Urbano.

To have ejected whatsoever that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have perished

some few men, who, having begun such a course of errors, must be glad to see their example followed. Urbano.

3. Accident; casual event; misfortune.

Solyman commended them for their value in their orders, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Urbano.

Nor feared he among the bands to stray

Of armed men; for often had he seen

The tragick end of many a bloody fray:

Her life had full of haps and hazards been. Urbano.

HAP-HAZARD. n. f. Chance; accident.

The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but so hard that all shun it, and had rather walk as men do in the dark by hap-hazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes in knowledge fake. Urbano.

We live at hap-hazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. Urbano.

We take our principles at hap-hazard upon trust, and without ever having examined them; and then believe a whole system, upon a presumption that they are true. Urbano.

To HAP. v. n. [from the noun.] To come by accident; to fall out; to happen.

It will be too late to gather provision from abroad, in the furnishing of ships or soldiers, which peradventure our need to be presently employed, and whose want may hap to hazard

a kingdom. Urbano.

Run you to the citadel,

And tell my lord and lady what hap hath. Urbano.

In destructions by deluge, the remnant which hap to be referred are ignorant people. Urbano.

HA'PLY. adv. [from hap.]

1. Perhaps; peradventure; it may be.

'Tis his love of theirs myself have often seen,

Haply when they have judg'd me fall asleep. Urbano.

To warn

Us, haply too secure, of our discharge

From penalty, because from death releas'd

Some days. Urbano.

Then haply yet your breast remains untouched,

Though that seems strange. Urbano.

Let us now see what conclusions may be found for subduction of any other state, that may haply labour under the like circumstances. Urbano.

2. By chance; by accident.

Leviathan, which God of all his works

Created hugest, that swim the ocean stream,

Him haply flum'ring on the Norway foam,

The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff

Deeming some island off, as fæmen tell,

With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,

Moors by his side. Urbano.

HA'PLASS. adj. [from hap.] Unhappy; unfortunate; luckless.

Unlucky. Urbano.

Hapless Ægeon, whom the fates have mark'd
To bear th' extremity of dire mishap! Shakespeare.
Here hapless Icarus had found his part,
Had not the father's grief restrain'd his art. Dryden.
Did his hapless passion equal mine,
I would refuse the bliss. Smith.

TO HAPPEN. v. n. [from happ.]

1. To fall out; to chance; to come to pass.
Bring forth your strong reasons, and show us what shall happen. Isaiah.

Say not I have finned, and what harm hath happened unto me. Ecclusiastic.

If it so fall out that thou art miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surpris'd, as if some unexpected thing had happened to thee. Tillotson.

2. To light; to fall by chance.

I have happened on some other accounts relating to mortalities. Grount.

HA'PPILY. adv. [from happy.]

1. Fortunately; luckily; successfully.

Were she as rough

As are the swelling Adriatick seas,

I come to wife it wealthy in Padua:

If wealthyly, then happily in Padua. Shakespeare.

Preferr'd by conquest, happily o'erthrown,

Falling they rise to be with us made one. Wallr.

Neither is it to trivial an undertaking to make a tragedy end happily; for 'tis more difficult to fave than kill. Dryden.

2. Adversely; gracefully; without labour.

Form'd by thy converse, happily to flee

From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. In a state of felicity; as, he lives happily.
By chance; peradventure. In this sense happily is written erroneously for happy.

One thing more I shall wish you to desire of them, who happily may perseu the two treatises. Digby.

HA'PPINESS. n. f. [from happy.]

1. Felicity; state in which the desires are satisfied.

Happiness is that estate whereby we attain, so far as possibly may be attained, the full possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired, and containeth in it after an eminent sort the contentation of our desires, the highest degree of all our perfection. Hobbes.

Oh! happiness of sweet retir'd content,

To be at once secure and innocent. Denham.

The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, argue that the same thing is not good to every man alike: this variety of pursuits shows, that every one does not place his happiness in the same thing. Locke.

2. Good luck; good fortune.

3. Fortuitous elegance; unsold grace.

Certain graces and happinesses, peculiar to every language, give life and energy to the words. Denham.

Some beauties yet no precepts can declare:

For there's a happiness as well as care. Pope.

HA'PPY. adj. [from hap; as lucky for luck.]

1. In a state of felicity; in a state where the desire is satisfied.

At other end Uran did Strephon lend

Her happy making hand. Sidney.

Am I happy in thy news?

—If to have done thee thing you gave in charge
Reget you happiness, be happy then;
For it is done. Shakespeare.

'Truth and peace, and love, shall ever shine

About the supreme throne

Of him, t' whole happy making fight alone,

When once our heav'nly guide shall climb. Milton.

Though the presence of imaginary good cannot make us happy, the absence of it may make us miserable. Addison.

2. Lucky; successful; fortunate.

Chymists have been more happy in finding experiments than the causes of them. Boyle.

Yet in this agony his fancy wrought,

And fear supply'd him with this happy thought. Dryden.

3. Adversely; ready.

One gentleman is happy at a reply, and another excels in a rejoinder. Swift.

HA'QUETON. n. f. A piece of armour. Spenser.

HARA'NGUE. n. f. [harangue, French.] The original of the French word is much questioned: Ménage thinks it a corruption of bearing, English; Junius imagines it to be discours au rang, to a circle, which the Italian arringo seems to favour. Perhaps it may be from orare, or oratione, oratoris, oratoris, a ueris, haranguer.] A speech; a popular oration.

Grey-headed men, and grave, with warriors mix'd,

All'mble, and harangues are heard; but soon

In factious opposition. Milton.

Nothing can better improve political schoolboys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues, against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine. Swift.

A multitude of preachers neglect method in their harangues.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

TO HARA'NGUE. v. n. [haranguer, French.] To make a speech; to pronounce an oration.

HARA'NGUER. n. f. [from harangue.] An orator; a public speaker; generally with some mixture of contempt.

He spent that day free from worldly trouble, harmlessly, and in a recreation that became a churchman. Walton.

Bullets batter the walls which stand inflexible, but fall harmlessly into wood or feathers. Decay of Piety.

HARMLESSNESS. n. f. [from harmless.] Innocence; freedom from injury or hurt.

When, through tasteless flat humility,
In dough-bak'd men some harmlessness we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he. Donne.

Compare the harmlessness, the credulity, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenious pliancy to virtuous counsels, which is in youth untainted, with the mischievousness, the slyness, the craft, the impudence, the falsehood, and the confirmed obtuseness in an aged long-practised sinner. South.

HARMONICAL. adj. [harmonia; harmonique, French.] HARMONICK. adj. portioned to each other; adapted to each other; concordant; musical.

After every three whole notes, nature requireth, for all harmonic use, one half note to be interposed. Bacon.

Harmonic sounds, and discordant sounds, are both active and positive; but blackness and darkness are, indeed, but privatives. Bacon.

So swells each wind-pipe; as intones to as,
Harmoni & twang of leather, horn, and brass. Pope.

HARMONIOUS. adj. [harmonious, French; from harmony.]

1. Adapted to each other; having the parts proportioned to each other.

All the wide-extended sky,
And all th' harmonious worlds on high,
And Virgil's sacred work shall die. Cowley.

God has made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us; but it will never come into our heads all at once; we must bring it home piece-meal. Lack.

2. Having sounds concordant to each other; musical.

Harmony in wedded pair,
More grateful than harmonious sounds to th' ear. Milton.
The verse of Chaucer is not harmonious to us: they who lived with him, and some time after him, thought it musical. Dryden's Fables.

HARMONIOUSLY. adv. [from harmonious.]

1. With just adaptation and proportion of parts to each other.

Not chaos-like, together crush'd and bruised;
But as the world, harmoniously confus'd:

Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, they agree. Pope.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom. Bentley.

2. Musically; with concord of sounds.

If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned, and harmoniously struck, we ought not therefore to worship the instrument, but him that makes the music. Stillington.

I have endur'd the biting Winter's blast. Rowe.

2. To fix horses in their traces.

Before the door her iron chariot stood,
All ready harnessed for journey new. Spenser.

Harnessed the horses, and get up the horsemen, and fland forth with your helmets. Jeremiah.

When I plow my ground, my horse is harnessed and chained to my plough. Hale.

To the harnessed yoke
They lend their shoulder, and begin their toil. Thomson.

HARP. n. f. [jeann, Saxon; harpe, French. It is used through both the Teutonic and Roman dialects, and has been long in use.

Remoniss, lyra planctus tibi, Barbarus harpa. Ven. Fort.]

1. A lyre, an instrument strung with wire and struck with the finger.

Arion, when through tempests cruel wreck
He forth was thrown into the greedy seas,
Through the sweet music which his harp did make,
Allur'd a dolphin him from death to ease. Spenser.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works. Milton.

Nor wanted tuneful harps, nor vocal quire,
The muses fung, Apollo touch'd the lyre. Dryden.

2. A constellation.

Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies
The shell, as lightest, first begins to rise;

This when sweet Orpheus struck, to list'ning rocks
He senses gave, and ears to wither'd oaks. Creech.

To HARP. v. n. [harpe, French; from the noun.]

1. To play on the harp.

I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. Rev.
Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped. I Corinthians.

The helmet cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glitt'ring ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressed notes to heav'n's new-born heir. Milton.

I conceive you harp a little too much upon one string. Collier on Pride.

2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.

Gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason

11 A

For

For inequality ; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear.

Shakespeare.

Macbeth, beware Macduff !

Beware the thane of Fife : dismiss me : enough.

—Whate'er thou art, for thy good caution, thanks :

Thou'lt burp'd my fear aright.

Shakespeare.

He seems

Proud and disdainful, barping on what I am,

Not what he knew I was.

Shakespeare.

HARPER, n. f. [from harp.] A player on the harp.

Never will I trust to speeches penn'd,

Nor to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue ;

Nor woe in rhyme, like a blind barper's song. Shakespeare.

I'm the god of the harp : stop, my fairest !—in vain ;

Nor the harp, nor the barper, could fetch her again. Tickell.

HARPING IRON, n. f. [from harpe, Latin.] A bearded dart with a line fastened to the handle, with which whales are struck and caught.

The boat which on the first assault did go,

Struck with a harping iron the younger foe ;

Who, when he felt his side so rudely gor'd,

Loud as the sea that nourish'd him he roar'd. Waller.

HARPOON, n. f. [harponer, French ; from harpon.] He that throws the harpoon in whalffishing.

HARPOON, n. f. [harpon, French.] A harping iron.

HARPY, n. f. [harpyia, Latin ; harpie, harpye, French.]

1. The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and foul long claws ; very filthy creatures ; which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the viands, did so defile the rest that they could not be endured. Religio.

That an harpy is not a centaur is by this way as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle. Locke.

2. A ravenous wretch.

I will do you any ambassage to the pigmies, rather than hold three words conference with this harpy. Shakespeare.

HARQUEBUSS, n. f. [See ARQUEBUS.] A handgun.

HARQUEBUSSIER, n. f. [from harquebuzi.] One armed with a harquebuss.

About thirty paces off were placed twenty thousand nimble harquebussiers, ranged in length, and but five in a rank. Kaellie.

HARRIDA, n. f. [Corrupted from haridella, a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed drumpet.

She just enlur'd the Winner she began,

And in four months a batter'd harridan ;

Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,

To bawd for others, and go shares with punk. Swift.

HARROW, n. f. [harroue, French ; harde, German, a rake.] A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth, drawn over sowed ground to break the clods and throw the earth over the seed.

The land with daily care

Is exercis'd, and with an iron war

Of rakes and harrows.

Dryden.

Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down.

Mortimer.

TO HARROW, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break with the harrow.

Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means,

Not only thy peasan, but also thy beans.

Jaffer.

Can't thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow ?

or will he harrow the valleys after thee ? Job.

Let the Volcians

Plow Rome, and harrow Italy, I'll never

Be such a galling to obey intinct.

Shakespeare.

2. To tear up ; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word

Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,

Make thy two eyes, like flars, start from their sockets. Sh.

Imagine you behold me bound and scourg'd,

My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips ;

Or hear me groaning on the rending tack. Rowe.

3. To pillage ; to strip ; to lay waste. See HARRY, which in Scottish is the same thing.

As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners ; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather. Bacon.

4. To invade ; to harass with incursions. [From Persian, Saxon.]

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy flowre,

The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre.

Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Most glorious Lord of life, that on this day

Did't make thy triumph over death and sin ;

And having harrow'd hell, did't bring away

Captivity thence captive, us to win.

Spenser.

5. To disturb ; to put into commotion. [This should rather be written harry, harry, French.]

Most like : it harrows me with fear and wonder. Shakespeare.

Amaz'd I flood, harrow'd with grief and care. Milton.

Harrow now out and weal away, he cried ;

What dismal day hath sent this curd light,

To see my lord so deadly damni'd ?

HARROW, interj. An exclamation of sudden distress. Spenser.

out of use.

TO HARROW, v. a. [harer, French.]

1. To tease ; to harr ; to ruffle.

Thou must not make thy former harrows ill.

—I repent me much

That I to harry'd him.

2. In Scotland it signifies to rob, plunder, or oppress ; as, he harried a neft ; that is, he took the young away ; as also, he harried me out of house and home ; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See TO HARROW.

HARSH, adj. [harshliche, German, Stimmer.]

1. Austere ; roughly loud.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine ;

Some sorts, when old, continue brisk and free ;

So age's gravity may seem severe,

But nothing harsh or bitter ought to appear. Dryden.

Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh and salt, are all the qualities of relief to denote that numberless variety of relishes. Locke.

The same defect of heat which gives a sweetness to the natures, may contribute to that roughness of our harps which bears some analogy to the harsh fruit of colder tries. Dryden.

2. Rough to the ear.

A name unmusical to Volscian ears,

And harsh in sound to thine. Shakespeare.

Age might, what nature never gives the young,

Have taught thee smoothness of thy native tongue ;

But fate needs not that, and will find thee

Through the harsh cadence of a rugged line.

The unnecessary consonants made their spelling noisy, and their pronunciation harsh. Dryden.

Thy loud commands thee now

With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,

To fervid duties. Dryden.

3. Crabbed ; morose ; peevish.

He was a wise man and an eloquent ; but in his harsh harsh and haughty.

Bear patiently the harsh words of thy enemies, as long that the anger of an enemy admonishes us of our duty. Seneca.

No harsh reflection let remembrance raise.

Forbear to mention what thou can't not praise. Pope.

A certain quickness of apprehension inclined him to into the first motions of anger ; but, for a long time he died, no one heard an intemperance or harsh word from him. Lucian.

4. Rugged to the touch.

Black feels as if you were feeling needles points, or harsh harsh sand ; and red feels very smooth. Dryden.

5. Unpleasing ; rigorous.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd ;

Though harsh the precept, yet the preacher char'd. Dryden.

HARSHLY, adv. [from harsh.]

1. Sourly ; austere to the palate, as unripe fruit.

2. With violence ; in opposition to gentleness, unless in the following passage it rather signifies unripe.

'Till, like ripe fruit, thou drop

Into thy mother's lap ; or be with ease

Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton.

4. Severely ; morosely ; crabbedly.

I would rather he was a man of a rough temper, than treat me harshly, than of an effeminate nature. Alfieri.

4. Ruggedly to the ear.

My wife is in a wayward mood to-day :

I tell you, 'twould wound harshly in her ears.

Get from him why he puts on this confusion,

Grating to harshly all his days of quiet

With turbulent and dangerous lunacy.

A hollow groan, a murr'ring wind arose ;

The rings of iron that on the doors were hung

Sent out a jarring found, and harshly rang.

HARSHNESS, n. f. [from harsh.]

1. Sourness ; austere taste.

Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard : the rolling doth soften and sweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the smooth distribution of the spirits into the parts ; for the unequal distribution of the spirits maketh the harshness. Locke.

2. Roughness to the ear.

Neither can the natural harshness of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony. Dryden.

Italian.

Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his unsmooth words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound ? Dryden.

10

H A R

- 'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The found must seem an echo to the fence. Pope.
3. Ruggedness to the touch.
Harshness and ruggedness of bodies is unpleasant to the touch. Bacon.
4. Crabbedness; moroseness; peevishness.
No, Regan, you shall never have my curse:
Thy tender-hearted nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort and not burn. Shakespeare.
- HART. n. f. [peppr, Saxon.] A he-deer of the large kind;
the male of the roe.
That infant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakespeare.
- The deer
And fearful harts do wander every where Amidst the dogs. May.
- HARTSHORN. n. f.
Hartshorn is a drug that comes into use as many ways, and under as many forms, as any one in the whole matéria medica.
What is used here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This species is the fallow deer; but some tell us, that the medicinal hartshorn should be that of the true hart or stag, called the red deer. The salt of hartshorn is a great sudorific, and the spirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalis: it is used to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the nose, and pouring down some drops of it in water. Hill.
- Ramole concretions of the volatile salts are observable upon the glass of the receiver, whilst the spirits of vipers and hartshorn are drawn. Woodward.
- HARTSHORN. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
- HART-ROYAL. n. f. A plant. A species of buckthorn plantain.
- HARTSTONGUE. n. f. [lingua cervina, Latin.] A plant.
It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moist and shady. There are very few of them in Europe. Miller.
- Hartstongue* is propagated by parting the roots, and also by seed. Martiner.
- HARTWORT. n. f. [terrylium, Latin.] It is an umbelliferous plant, with a rose-shaped flower, consisting of five unequal heart-fashioned petals, which are placed circularly and rest on the empalement, which afterward becomes an almost round fruit, composed of two flat seeds, which easily cast off their covering with a raised border, which are commonly indented.
It is an annual plant, and perishes soon after it has perfected its seed. It is found wild in several parts of England. Miller.
- HARVEST. n. f. [peppr, Saxon.]
1. The season of reaping and gathering the corn.
As it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the flume and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shakespeare.
With harvest work he is worse than he was in the Spring. L'Estrange.
2. The corn ripened, gathered and inned.
From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rural soil
When the father is too fondly kind,
Such feed he sows, such harvest shall he find. Dryden.
3. The product of labour.
Let these small cotts and hills suffice:
Let us the harvest of our labour eat;
'Tis labour makes the coarsest diet sweet. Dryden.
- HARVEST-HOME. n. f.
1. The song which the reapers sing at the feast made for having inned the harvest.
Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd;
Come, my boys, come,
Come, my boys, come,
And merrily sing out harvest-home. Dryden.
2. The time of gathering harvest.
At harvest-home, and on the shearing-day,
When he should thanks to Pan and Pales pay,
And better Ceres, trembling to approach
The little barrel. Dryden.
3. The opportunity of gathering treasure.
His wife seems to be well favoured: I will use it as the key of the cuckoldy rogue's coffer; and there's my harvest-home. Shakespeare.
- HARVEST-LORD. n. f. The head reaper at the harvest.
Grant harvest-lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Tuff.
- HARVESTER. n. f. [from harvest.] One who works at the harvest.
- HARVESTMAN. n. f. [harvest and man.] A labourer in harvest.
Like to a harvestman, that's talk'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. Shakespeare.

H A S

- To HASH. v. n. [hacker, French.] To mince; to chop into small pieces, and mingle.

- HASP. n. f. [peppr, Saxon, whence in some provinces it is yet called hask.] A clasp folded over a staple, and fastened on with a padlock.
Have doors to open and shut at pleasure, with hasps to them. Martiner.
- To HASP. v. n. [from the noun.] To shut with a hasp.
- HA'SOCK. n. f. hask, German. Stinner.
1. A thick mat on which men kneel at church.
He found his parishioners very irregular; and in order to make them kneel, and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hask and common prayer book. Addison.
2. In Scotland it is applied to any thing made of rushes or pri-vet, on which a person may sit: it is therefore probable that hask and hask are the same.
- HAST. The second person singular of have.
- HASTE. n. f. [haste, French; haste, Dutch.]
1. Hurry; speed; nimbleness; precipitation.
Spare him, death!
Let not pity with her tears
Keep such distance from thine ears:
But O, thou wilt not, canst not spare!
Haste hath never time to hear. Crashaw.
- Our lines reform'd, and not compos'd in haste,
Polish'd like marble, would like marble last;
But as the present, so the last age writes.
In both we find like negligence and wit.
In as much haste as I am, I cannot forbear giving an example. Dryden.
- The wretched father, running to their aid
With pious haste, but vain, they next invade. Dryden.
2. Passion; vehemence.
I said in my haste all men are liars. Psalms.

post that hasteth by. Wisdom.
- Hasting* to pay his tribute to the sea,
Like mortal life to meet eternity. Denham.
- These rites perform'd, the prince, without delay,
Hastes to the nether world, his destin'd way. Dryden.
- To distant Sparta, and the spacious waste
Of sandy Pyle, the royal youth shall haste. Pope.
- Soon as the sun awakes the sprightly court,
Leave their repose, and hasten to the sport. Prior.
- To HASTE. } v. a. To push forward; to urge on; to pre-
To HA'STEN. } cipitate; to drive to a swifter pace.
- Let it be so hastid, that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. Shakespeare.
- All hopes of succour from your arms is past;
To save us now, you must our ruin haste. Dryden.
- Each sees his lamp with different lustre crown'd;
Each knows his course with different periods bound;
And in his passage through the liquid space,
Nor hastens, nor retards his neighbour's race. Prior.
- HA'STENER. n. f. [from hasten.] One that hastens or hurries.
- HA'STILY. adj. [from hasty.]
1. In a hurry; speedily; nimbly; quickly.
A voice, that call'd loud and clear,
Come hither, hither, O come hastily!
If your grace incline that we should live,
You must not, sir, too hastily forgive. Waller.
- The next to danger, hot pursuit by fate,
Half cloth'd, half naked, hastily retire. Dryden.
2. Rashly; precipitately.
Without considering consequences, we hastily engaged in a war which hath cost us sixty millions. Swift.
3. Passionately; with vehemence.
- HA'STINESS. n. f. [from hasty.]
1. Haste;

1. Haste; speed.

A fellow being out of breath, or seeming to be so for haste, with humble hastings told Basilus. Sidney.

2. Hurry; precipitation.

'I here is most just cause to fear, left our hastings to embrace a thing of so perilous consequence, should cause posterity to feel those evils. Hester.

The turns of his verse, his breakings, his propriety, his numbers, and his gravity, I have as far imitated as the poverty of our language, and the hastings of my performance, would allow. Dryden.

3. Angry tellings; passionate vehemence.

HA'STINGS. n. f. [from hasty.] Peas that come early.

The large white and green hastings are not to be let 'till the cold is over. Mr. rimer.

HA'STY. adj. [hastif, French, from haste; hastig, Dutch.]

1. Quick; speedy.

Is all the counsel that we two have shar'd,
The sisters vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the hasty footed time
For parting us. Shakespeare.

2. Passionate; vehement.

He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding; but he that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly. Proverbs.

3. Rash; precipitate.

Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words? There is more hope of a fool than of him. Proverbs.

Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God. Ecc. v. 2.

4. Early ripe.

Beauty shall be a fading flower, and as the hasty fruit before the Summer. Is. xxviii. 4.

HA'STY-PUDDING. n. f. A pudding made of milk and flower, boiled quick together; as also of oatmeal and water boiled together.

Sure hasty-pudding is thy chiefest dish,
With bullock's liver, or some stinking fish. Darset.

HAT. n. f. [hæz, Saxon; hatt, German.] A cover for the head.

She's as big as he is; and there's her thrum hat, and her muller too. Shakespeare.

Out of meer ambition you have made
Your holy hat be stamp on the king's coin. Shakespeare.

His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish moutera. Bacon.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
And with soft words his drooping spirits cheer'd;
His hat adorn'd with wings disclos'd the god,
And in his hand he bore the sleep compelling rod. Dryden.

HATBAND. n. f. [hat and band.] A string tied round the hat.

They had hats of blue velvet, with fine plumes of divers colours, set round like hatbands. Bacon.

Room for the noble gladiator! see
His coat and hatband flew his quality. Dryden.

HAT'S CASE. n. f. [hat and case.] A flight box for a hat.

I might mention a hatscase, which I would not exchange for all the beavers in Great Britain. Addison.

TO HATCH. v. a. [hæcen, German, as Skinner thinks, from hæcen, eggen, ægg, eggs, Saxon.]

1. To produce young from eggs by the warmth of incubation.

When they have laid such a number of eggs as they can conveniently cover and hatch, they give over, and begin to sit. Ray.

He kindly spreads his spacious wing,
And hatches plenty for th' ensuing Spring. Denham.

The teard crows, and fens and flocks,
Their brood as numerous hatch from th' eggs, that soon
Bursting with kindly rupture, forth disclos'd
Their callow young. Milton.

2. To quicken the egg by incubation.

Others hatch their eggs and tend the birth, 'till it is able to shift for itself. Addison.

3. To produce by precedent action.

4. To form by meditation; to contrive.

Which thing they very well know, and, I doubt not, will easily confess, who live to their great both toil and grief, where the blasphemies of Arians are renewed by them; who, to hatch their heresy, have chosen those churches as fittest nests where Athanasius's creed is not heard. Hester.

He was a man harmless and faithful, and one who never hatched any hopes prejudicial to the king, but always intended his safety and honour. Hayward.

5. [From hatch, to cut.] To shade by lines in drawing or graving.

Who first shall wound, through others arms, his blood appearing fresh,
Shall win this sword, silver'd and hatched. Clapm.

Such as Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again
As venerable Nestor, hatched in silver,
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian ears

To his experienc'd tongue.

Those tender hairs, and those hatching strokes of the pencil, which make a kind of minced meat in paintings, are never able to deceive the fight. Stanhope.

TO HATCH. v. n.

1. To be in the state of growing quick.

He observed circumstances in eggs, whilst they were hatching, which varied. Hog.

2. To be in a state of advance towards effect.

HATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A brood excluded from the egg.

2. The act of exclusion from the egg.

3. Disclosure; discovery.

Something's in his soul,

O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;

And, I do doubt, the bat, b and the disclose

Will be some danger. Shakespeare.

4. [Haca, Saxon; hæce, Dutch, a bolt.] The tail door; the opening over the door.

Something about, a little from the right,

In at the window, or else o'er the hatch.

5. [In the plural.] The doors or openings by which they escape from one deck or floor of a ship to another.

To the king's ship, invisible as thou art,

There shalt thou find the mariners asleep

Under the hatches. Shakespeare.

There she's hid;

The mariners all under hatches stow'd.

So fear, impell'd by winds with added pow'r,

Affault the sides, and o'er the hatches tow'r.

A ship was fallen to the shore;

The plank was ready laid for safe ascent,

For shelter there the trembling shadow bent,

And hatch'd and sculk'd, and under hatches went. Dryden.

6. To be under HATCHES. To be in a state of extreme poverty, or depression.

He assures us how this fatherhood began in Adam, continued its course 'till the flood, got out of the ark with Noah, made and supported all the kings of the earth, 'till the captivity in Egypt, and then the poor fatherhood was under hatches. Luc.

7. Hatches. Floodgates.

TO HATCHEL. v. a. [hachelen, German.] To hatch is as to separate the fibrous from the brittle part.

This asbestos seems different from that named by Kircher in his description of China; which he says, per se, was water, moulders like clay, and is a fibrous small cartilage, like hairs growing upon the flones; and for the hatching, spinning, and weaving it, he refers to his mineralogicon. Newton.

HA'TCHEL. n. f. [from the verb; hachel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten.

HA'TCHER. n. f. [from hatchel.] A beater of flax.

HATCHET. n. f. [hache, hachette, French, quid, Latin.] A small axe.

The hatchet is to hew the irregularities of pietas &c. Alca.

His harmful hatchet he bent in his hand,

And to the field he speedeth. Spenser.

Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the hatch is a hatchet. Shakespeare.

Nails, hammers, hatchets sharp, and hammers strong

Swords, spears, twice dight in the hatch flames. Copland.

Of brothers blood.

Tyrrhus, the foster-father of the beast,

Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fill. Dryden.

Our countryman presented him with a curious hatchet, and asking him whether it had a good edge, tried it upon the hatchet. Newton.

HATCHET-FACE. n. f. An ugly face; such, I suppose, as might be hewn out of a block by a hatchet.

An ape his own dear image will embrace;

An ugly beau desires a hatchet-face. Dryden.

HA'TCHMENT. n. f. Corrupted from armament. See armament.

Armorial escutcheon placed over a hatchment at a funeral.

His means of death, his obscure funeral,
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment o'er his body;

No noble rites nor formal oblation, Shakespeare.

Cry to be heard.

HA'TCHWAY. n. f. [hatches and way.] The way out at through the hatches.

TO HATE. v. a. [hætan, Saxon.] To detest; to abhor, to abominate; to regard with the passion contrary to love.

—I am, I think, assur'd I love you not.

—You are, I think, assur'd I love you not.

—I am assur'd, no just cause to hate me. Shakespeare.

Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

Do all men kill the thing they do not love?

—Hates any man the thing he would not kill?

—Every offence is not a hate at first. Shakespeare.

Thou'lt offend inhabitants of thy body land thou hates me on.

ing most odious works. Shakespeare.

But whatsoever our jarring fortunes prove,
Though our lords hate, methinks we two may love. Dryd.
HATE. n. f. [hate, Saxon.] Malignity; detestation; the contrary to love.

Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
Your favours nor your hate. Shakespeare.
Hate to Mezentius, arm'd five hundred more,
Whom Mincius from his fire Brancus bore. Dryden.
Naufraca teaches that the afflicted are not always the objects of divine hate. Brown.

HATEFUL. adj. [hate and full.]
1. That which causes abhorrence; odious; abominable; detestable.

My name's Macbeth.
—The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear. Shakespeare.
There is no vice more hateful to God and man than ingratitude. Peacocks.

What owe I to his commands
Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me down,
To sit in hateful office here confin'd
Inhabitant of heav'n, and heav'nly born?
I hear the tread

Of hateful steps: I must be viewless now.
But Umbriel, hateful gnome! forbears not so;
He breaks the vial whence the furies flow. Pepe.

2. Abhorrent; detesting; malignant; malevolent.
Palamon, compell'd
No more to try the fortune of the field;
And, worse than death, to view with hateful eyes
His rival's conquest, and renounce the prize. Dryden.

HATEFULLY. adv. [from hateful.]
1. Odiously; abominably.

2. Malignantly; maliciously.
All their hearts flood hatefully appaid
Long since. Chapman.
They shall deal with thee hateful, take away all thy labour, and leave thee naked and bare. Ezek. xxiii. 29.

HATEFULNESS. n. f. [from hateful.] Odiousness.
HATER. n. f. [from hate.] One that hates; an abhorrer; a detester.

1. of her understanding that most noble constancy in my lord Argalus; which whosoever loves not, shews himself to be a hater of virtue, and unworthy to live in the society of mankind. Sidney.

Whilst he stood up and spoke,
He was my master, and I wore my life
To spend upon his haters. Shakespeare.

An enemy to God, and a hater of all good. Brown.
They never wanted so much knowledge as to inform and convince them of the unlawfulness of a man's being a murderer, an hater of God, and a covenant-breaker. South.

HATED. n. f. [from hate.] Hate; ill-will; malignity; malevolence; dislike; abhorrence; detestation; abomination; the contrary notion to love.

Hated is the thought of the pain which any thing present or absent is apt to produce in us. Locke.

I with I had a cause to seek him there,
To oppose his hatred fully. Shakespeare.

Hated is the passion of defiance, and there is a kind of aversion and hostility included in its very essence; but then, if there could have been hatred in the world when there was scarce any thing odious, it would have acted within the compass of its proper object. South.

Hated are often begotten from slight and almost innocent occasions, and quarrels propagated and continued in the world. Locke.

Retain no malice nor hatred against any: he ready to do them all the kindness you are able. Blake.

She is a Presbyterian of the most rank and virulent kind,
and consequently has an inveterate hatred to the church. Swift.

HATTER. v. a. [perhaps corrupted from hatter.] To harry;
to weary; to wear out with fatigue. Dryden.

He's hatter'd out with penance.
HATTER. n. f. [from hat.] A maker of hats.

A hatter sells a dozen of hats for five shillings a piece. Swift.
HAT-TRICK. n. f. [hat-trick, Eric.] A flock of corn. Diels.

HAT-TRICK. n. f. [hat-trick, old French.] A coat of mail; a breastplate.

Hum on the hushet struck the prince's forehead,
That quite dispersed all the linked frame,
And pierced to the skin. Speiser.

Hushet and helmets are hew'd with many a wound;
The mighty maces with such battle defend,
They break the bones, and make the solid armour bend. Dryden.

To HATE. v. a. pret. and part. pass. hated. [hoben, Gothic; hatoen, Saxon; hatoen, Dutch; atter, French; atter, Ital.]
1. Not to be without.

I have brought him before you, that after examination had
I might have something to write. Act. xxv. 25.
Nº LXVII.

2. To carry; to wear.
Upon the mast they saw a young man, who sat as on horseback, bearing nothing upon him. Sidney.

3. To make use of.
I have no Levite to my priest. Judg. xvii. 13.

4. To possess.
He that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack. Ecc. xvi. 18.

5. To bear; to carry; to be attended with or waited for, as an accident or concomitant.
I will never truit a man again for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have every thing in him by wearing his apparel neatly. Shakespeare.

6. To obtain; to enjoy.
Now, O Father, glorify me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was. Jo. xvii. 5.

7. To take; to receive.
A secret happiness, in Petronius, is called carissima felicitas, and which I suppose he had from the felicitas under of Horace. Dryden.

8. To be in any state.
Have I need of madmen, that ye have brought this fellow? Act. xxi. 15.

9. To put; to take.
With toiling and raking, and setting on cox,
Grass lately in swathes is mow for an ox;
That done, go and cart it, and have it away. Tupper.

10. To procure; to find.
I would have had any one name to me that tongue, that any one can have as he should do, by the rules of grammar. Locke.

11. Not to neglect; not to omit.
I cannot speak; if my heart be not ready to burst. Well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself. Shakespeare.

Your plea is good; but still I say beware:
Laws are explain'd by men; so have a care. Pepe.

12. To hold; to regard.
Of the maid servants shall I be had in honour. 2 Sa. vi. 22.
The proud have had me greatly in derision. Pf. cxix. 51.

13. To maintain; to hold opinion.
Sometimes they will have them to be natural heat, whereas some of them are cold and cold; and sometimes they will have them to be the qualities of the tangible parts, whereas they are things by themselves. Bacon.

14. To contain.
You have of these pedlars that have more in 'em than you'd think, sister. Shakespeare.

15. To require; to claim.
What would these madmen have?
First they would bribe us without pence,
Deceive us without common sense,
And without pow'r enslave. Dryden.

16. To be a husband or wife to another.
If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him. Shakespeare.

17. To be engaged, as in a task.
If we maintain things that are established, we have to strive with a number of heavy prejudices, deeply rooted in the hearts of men. Hatter.

The Spaniards captain never hath to meddle with his soldiers pay. Senfer.

You did set your course to treat of the evils which hindered the peace and good ordering of that land, among which that of the inconvenience of the laws was the first which you had in hand. Senfer.

Kings have to deal with their neighbours, their wives, their children, their prelates or clergy, their nobles, their merchants and their commons. Bacon.

18. To wish; to desire.
I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness. Pf. lxxxiv. 10.

I would have no man discouraged with that sort of life or series of actions, in which the choice of others, or his own necessities, may have engaged him. Alfons.

19. To buy.
If the trifles were rated only by art and artificialness, we should have them much cheaper. Collier.

20. It is most used in English, as in other European languages, as an auxiliary verb to make the tenses. Hate the preterperfect, and had the preterperfect.

If there had been words enough between them to have expressed provocation, they had gone together by the ears. Gray.

I have heard one of the greatest genius's this age has produced, who had been trained up in all the polite studies of antiquity, assure me, upon his being obliged to search into records, that he at last took an incredible pleasure in it. Alfons.

I have not here considered custom as it makes things easy, but as it renders them delightful; and though others have made the same reflections, it is impossible they may not have drawn those wiles from it. Alfons.

That

H A V

That admirable precept which Pythagoras is said to have given to his disciples, and which that philosopher must have drawn from the observation I have enlarged upon. Addison.

The gods have placed labour before virtue. Addison.

This observation we have made on man. Addison.

Evil spirits have contracted in the body habits of lust and sensuality, malice and revenge. Addison.

Their torments have already taken root in them. Addison.

It has been finely improved by many divines. Addison.

That excellent author has shewn how every particular custom and habit of virtue will, in its own nature, produce the heaven, or a state of happiness, in him who shall hereafter practise it. Addison.

2. HAVE at, or with, is an expression denoting resolution to make some attempt.

He that will caper with for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. Shakespeare.

I can bear my part; 'tis my occupation: have at it with you. Shakespeare.

I never was out at a mad frolic, though this is the maddest I ever undertook: have with you, lady mine; I take you at your word. Dryden.

HA'VEN. n. f. [haven, Dutch; havre, French.]

1. A port; a harbour; a safe station for ships.

And haughty souls, that mov'd with mutual hate,

In fighting fields pursu'd and found their fate. Dryden.

2. Proudly great.

Our vanquish'd wills that pleasing force obey:

Her goodness takes our liberty away;

And haughty Britain yields to arbitrary sway. Prior.

3. Bold; adventurous.

Who now shall give me words and found

Equal unto this haughty enterprize?

Or who shall lend me wings, with which from ground

My lowly verse may loftily arise? Spenser.

HA'VING. n. f. [from have.]

H A U

1. Possession; estate; fortune.

My having is not much;

I'll make division of my present with you:

Hold, there's half my coffer. Shakespeare.

2. The act or state of possessing.

Of the one side was allegized the having a picture, which the other wanted; of the other side, the first thinking the shield. Swiss.

Thou art not for the fashion of these times,

Where none will sweat but for promotion;

And having that, do choak their service up,

Even with the having. Shakespeare.

3. Behaviour; regularity. This is still retained in the Swiss dialect.

The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild prince and Poins: he is of too high a reputation; he knows too much. Shakespeare.

HA'VIOUR. n. f. [for behaviour.] Conduct; manner.

Their ill havours garres men mislay

Both of their doctrines and their fay. Spenser.

HAUL. v. a. [haler, French, to draw.] To pull; to drag; to drag by violence. A word which, applied to things, implies violence; and, to persons, awkwardness or rudeness.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,

Is in safe durance and contagious prison,

Haul'd thither by mechanic dirty hands. Shakespeare.

The youth with fangs and thimble,

Some dance, some haul the rope. Devin.

Some the wheels prepare,

And fasten to the hories feet; the rest

With cables haul along th' unwieldy beast. Dryden.

In his grandeur he naturally chafes to haul up others after him whose accomplishments most resemble his own. Swift.

Thither they bent, and haul'd their ships to land;

The crooked keel divides the yellow sand. Pope.

While romp-living mis

Is haul'd about in gallantry robust. Thomson.

HAUL. n. f. [from the verb.] Pull; violence in dragging.

The leap, the flap, the haul, and flouk to arms

Of native muscle, the respondent dance. Pope.

HAUM. n. f. [for haum, or haum; jealousy, Saxons; haum, Dutch and Danish.] Straw.

In champion countries a pleasure they take

To mow up their haums for to brew and to bake:

The haum is the straw of the wheat or rice;

Which once being reap'd, they mow by and by. Swift.

Having stripped off the haum or binds from the straw, you pick the hops, stack them up for their security in ware. Murray.

HAUNCH. n. f. [hauncle, Dutch; haunch, French; can, Italian.]

1. The thigh; the hind hip.

Hail, groom! didst thou not see a bleeding hind?

Whose right haunch carried my steedst arrow broke! Spenser.

If thou dost, tell me.

To make a man able to teach his horse to step and can quick, and to rest on his haunches, is of use to a gentleman both in peace and war. Low.

2. The rear; the hind part.

O Westmorland, thou art a summer bird,

Which ever in the haunch of winter sings

The lifting up of day. Shakespeare.

HAUNT. v. a. [hanter, French.]

1. To frequent; to be much about any place or person.

A man who for his hospitality is so much haunt, that no news stir but comes to his ears. Swift.

spent in curing some very dangerous wounds, also once we were acquainted, and acquainted we were haunt than our selves expected, the continually almost haunted us. Swiss.

I do haunt thee in the battle thus,

Because some tell me that thou art a king. Shakespeare.

She this dangerous forest haunts,

And in sad accents utters her complaints. Waller.

Earth now

Secur'd like to heav'n a feat where gods might dwell,

Or wander with delight, and love to haunt

Her sacred shades. Milton.

Celestial Venus haunts Idalia's groves;

Diana Cynthia, Ceres Hybla loves

2. It is used frequently in an ill sense of one that comes un-come. Swift.

You wrong me, fir, thus still to haunt my house;

I told you, fir, my daughter is dispos'd of.

Oh, could I see my country-feast!

There leving near a gentle brook;

Sleep, or peruse some ancient book;

And there in sweet oblivion drown

Those cares that haunt the court and town. Swift.

3. It is eminently used of apparitions or spectres that appear in a particular place. Pope.

- Foul spirits haunt my resting place,
And ghally visions break my sleep by night.
All these the woes of Oedipus have known,
Your fates, your furies, and your haunted town.
Fairfax.
- To HAUNT. v. n. To be much about; to appear frequently.
I've charged thee not to haunt about my doors:
In honest plainness thou hast heard me say,
My daughter's not for thee.
Pope.

The air is delicate.
Shakespeare.
- HAUNT*. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Place in which one is frequently found.
We set toils, nets, gins, snares and traps for beasts and birds in their own haunts and walks, and without any fear of faith and confidence.
L'Estrange.
- To me pertains not, she replies,
To know or care where Cupid flies;
What are his haunts, or which his ways,
Where he would dwell, or whither stray.
Prior.
- A scene where, if a god should cast his sight,
A god might gaze and wonder with delight!
Joy touch'd the messenger of heav'n; he stay'd
Entranc'd, and all the blissful haunt survey'd.
Pope.
2. Habit of being in a certain place.
The haunt you have got about the courts will one day or another bring your family to beggary.
Arbutnot.
- HAUNTER*. n. f. [from haunt.] Frequent; one that is often found in any place.
The ancient Grecians were an ingenious people, of whom the vulgar sort, such as were haunters of theatres, took pleasure in the conceits of Aristophanes.
Wotton.
- O goddess, haunter of the woodland green,
Queen of the nether skies.
Dryden.
- HA'VOCK*. n. f. [hæfeg, Welsh, devastation.] Waste; wide and general devastation; merciless destruction.
Having been never used to have any thing of their own, and now being upon spoil of others, they make no spare of any thing, but havock and confusion of all they meet with.
Spenser.
- Saul made havock of the church.
Acts viii. 3.
- Ye gods, what havock does ambition make
Among your works!
Addison.
- The Rabbin, to express the great havock which has been made of them, tell us, that there were such torrents of holy blood shed, as carried rocks of a hundred yards in circumference above three miles into the sea.
Addison.
- If it had either air or fuel, it must make a greater havock than any history mentions.
Cheney.
- HA'VOCK*. interj. [from the noun.] A word of encouragement to laughter.

Cries havock! and lets loose the dogs of war.
Shakespeare.
- To HA'VOCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To waste; to destroy;
to lay waste.
Whatsoever they leave, the soldier spoils and havocketh
likewise; so that between both, nothing is very shortly left.
Spenser.
- See! with what heat these dogs of hell advance,
To waste and havock yonder world, which I
So fair and good created!
Milton.
- HA'UTHOY*. n. f. [haut and hoi.] A wind instrument.
I saw it, and told John of Gaunt he beat his own name; for you might have trust'd him and all his apparel into an celskin: the calf of a treble hautboy was a mansion for him, a court; and now hath he land and bees.
Shakespeare.
- Now give the hautboy breath; he comes, he comes.
Dryden.
- HA'UTHOY Strawberry*. See STRAWBERRY.

bles did not bring forth raisins, rather than haws and blackberries.
L'Estrange.
2. An excrescence in the eye.
3. [hæg, Saxon; haw, a garden, Danish.] A small piece of ground adjoining to an house. In Scotland they call it hawth.
Upon the haw at Plymouth is cut out in the ground the portraiture of two men, with clubs in their hands, whom they term Gog and Magog.
Cureus.
- HA'WHORN*. n. f. [hæg horn, Saxon.] A species of medlar; the thorn that bears haws.
The great use to which it is applied in England is to make hedges and fences; and there are two or three varieties of it about London; but that sort which produces the smallest leaves is preferable, because its branches always grow close together.
Milner.
- There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon bawthorns, and elegies on brambles.
Shakespeare.
- The bawthorn fly is all black, and not big.
Some in their hands, beside the lance and shield,
The boughs of woodbine, or of bawthorn held.
Dryden.
- Now bawthorn blossoms, now the daisies spring.
The bawthorn whitens, and the juicy groves
Put forth their buds.
Temple.
- To HAW. v. n. [Perhaps corrupted from hawk or bick.] To speak slowly with frequent intermission and hesitation.
'Tis a great way; but yet, after a little humming and haw- ing upon't, he agreed to undertake the job.
L'Estrange.
- HAWK*. n. f. [hæfeg, Welsh; hæg, Saxon.]
1. A bird of prey, used much anciently in sport to catch other birds.
Do'st thou love hawking? Thou hast hawk will fear
Above the morning lark.
Shakespeare.

picture, than to cut his hawk's meat.
Pea-bum.
- Whence born on liquid wing
The founding culver shoots; or where the hawk,
His high in the bleeding cliff, his airy builds.
Thomson.
2. [Hæf, Welsh.] An effort to force phlegm up the throat.
To HAWK. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To fly hawks at fowls; to catch birds by means of a hawk.
'Tis his highness' pleasure
You do prepare to ride unto St. Alban's,
Whereat the king and queen do mean to hawk.
Shakespeare.
- Do'st thou love hawking? Thou hast hawks will fear
Above the morning lark.
Shakespeare.
- One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking
and hunting.
Locke.
- He that *hawk*s at larks and sparrows has no less sport, though a much less considerable quarry, than he that flies at nobler game.
Locke.
- A false Henry is, when Emma *hawk*s;
With her of tartsels and of lures he talks.
Prior.
2. To fly at; to attack on the wing.
A falcon trow'ring in her pride of place,
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at and kill'd.
Shakespeare.
- Whether upward to the moon they go,
Or dream the winter out in caves below,
Or hawk at flies elsewhere, concerns us not to know.
Dryden.
3. [Hæf, Welsh.] To force up phlegm with a noise.
Come, fit, fit, and a song.—Shall we clap into't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or faying we are hoarse, which are the only privileges to a bad voice.
Shakespeare.
- She complain'd of a foreneck of her throat, and of a flunking tough phlegm which the hawked up in the mornings.
Wiceman.
- Blood, cast out of the throat or windpipe, is spit out with a hawking or small cough; that out of the gums is spit out without hawking, coughing, or vomiting.
Harvey.
4. To tell by proclaiming it in the streets. [From hæf, German,
a faleman.]
His works are hawk'd in ev'ry street;
But seldom rose above a sheet.
Swift.
- HAWKED*. adj. [from hawk.] Formed like a hawk's bill.
Flat noses seem comely unto the Moor, an aquiline or hawked one unto the Persian, a large and prominent nose unto the Roman.
Dryden.
- HA'WKIER*. n. f. [from hawk, German.] One who sells his wares by proclaiming them in the street.
I saw my labours, which had cost me so much thought and watching, hawked about by common hawkiers, which I once intended for the weighty consideration of the greatest person.
Swift.
- To grace this honour'd day the queen proclaims,
By herald hawkers, high heroic games:
She summons all her sons; an endless band
Pours forth, and leaves unpeopled half the land.
Pope.
- HA'WKWEED*. n. f.
The characters are: the stalks are branched and slender, the leaves produced alternately, and the flower consists of many leaves placed in an orbicular order, and open in form of a marigold: the seeds are slender and angular, or furrowed:
The whole plant hath a milky juice. Oxtongue is a species of this plant.
Milner.

- HAY*. n. f. [hæg, hæg, Saxon; hæg, Dutch.] Grass dried to tender cattle in winter.
Make hay while the sun shines.
Camden.
- Make poor men's cattle break their necks;
Set fire on barns a d hay stacks in the night.
And bid the owners quench them with their tears.
Shaks.
- We have tears of dung, and of hay and herbs laid up moist.
Bacon.

Or if the earlier season lead
To the tann'd hay cock in the mead.
Bring them for food sweet boughs and oars cut,
Nor all the winter long thy hay rick shut.
Some tuners turn long and slender sprigs of ivory, as small as an hay stalk.
The bell manure for meadows is the bottom of hay mows and hay stacks.
Hay and oats, in the management of a groom, will make ale.

By some hay cock, or some hay fly, in,
He bids his beads both even sing and mourn.
Houzelinda, in a gamefome mood,
Behind a hay cock loudly laughing flood.
The hum of bees inviting sleep lincete,
Into the guileless breath, beneath the shade,
Or thrown at large amid the fragrant hay.
To dance the Hay. To dance in a ring: probably from dancing round a hay cock.

I will play on the tabor to the worthies,
And let them think on the hearth they see,
This mads them well confum'd be,
When fires well high confum'd be,
There dancing hays by two and three,
Just as your fancy calls them.
The gum and gliffling, which with art
And study'd method, in each part
Hangs down the heart,
Looks just as if that day
Snails there had crawl'd the hay.

HAY, n. f. [from hais, French, a hedge.] A net which incloses the haunt of an animal.
Cones are destroyed by hays, curs, spaniels, or tumblers bred up for that purpose.

HAYMAKER, n. f. [hay and male.] One employed in drying grafs for hay.
As to the return of his health and vigour, were you here,
You might enquire of his haymaker.

HAZARD, n. f. [hazard, French; azar, Spanish; beſis, Ru-nick, danger.]
1. Chance; accident; fortuitous hap.
I have bet my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die.
I will upon all hazards well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'th my tongue so well.
Where the mind does not perceive this connection, there mens opinions are not the product of judgment, but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction.

2. Danger; chance of danger.
We are bound to yield unto our Creator, the father of all mercy, eternal thanks, for that he hath delivered his law unto the world; a law wherein for many things are laid open as a light which otherwise would have been buried in darkness, but without the hazard, or rather not with the hazard, but with the certain loss of thousands of souls, most undoubtedly now saved.

The hazard I have run to see you here, should inform you that I have not at a common rate.
Men are led on from one stage of life to another in a condition of the utmost hazard, and yet without the least apprehension of their danger.

3. A game at dice.
The duke playing at hazard at the groom-porter's, in much company, held in a great many hands together, and drew a huge heap of gold.
To HAZARD, v. a. [hazard, French.] To expose to chance;
to put into danger.

They might, by persifling in the extremity of that opinion, hazard greatly their own citates, and so weaken that pact which their places now give.

It was in his power to adventure upon his own fortune, or bearing a publick charge to hazard himself against a man of private condition.

To HAZARD, v. n.
1. To try the chance.

I pray you tarry; pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,
I lose your company.

2. To adventure.
She from her fellow-provinces would go,
Rather than hazard to have you her toe.

HAZARDE, adj. [from hazard] Venturesome; liable to chance.
An hazardable determinat'on it is, unto fluctuating and indifferent effects, to affix a positive type or period.

HAZARDER, n. f. [from hazard.] He who hazards.
HAZARDY, n. f. [from hazard.] Temerity; precipitation;
rash adventurousness. Obsolete.

Hasty wrath, and heedless hazard,
Do breed repentance late, and lasting infamy.

Spenser's Fa. Queen.

HAZARDOUS, adj. [hazard, Fr. from hazard] Dangerous; exposed to chance.

Grant that our hazard us attempt prone vain,
We feel the worst, secur'd from greatest pain.
HAZARDOUSLY, adv. [from hazard.] With danger; at chance.

HAZE, n. f. [The etymology unknown.] Fog; mist.
To HAZE, v. n. To be foggy or misty.

To HAZE, v. a. To fright one.

HAZEL, n. f. [hazel, Saxon; corjari, Latin.]
It hath male flowers growing at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree: the nuts grow in clusters, and are closely joined together at the bottom, each being covered with an outward husk or cup, which opens at the top, and when the fruit is ripe it falls out: the leaves are roundish and entire.
The species are hazelnut, cobnut, and filbert. The red and white filberts are mostly esteemed for their fruit.

Kate, like the hazel twig,
Is straight and slender; and as brown in hue
As hazel nuts, and sweeter than the lettuce.
Her chariot is an empty hazel nut.
Why fit we not beneath the grateful shade,
Which hazel's intermix'd with elms, have made?
There are some from the size of a hazel nut to that of a man's fist.

HAZEL, adj. [from the noun.] Light brown; of the colour of hazel.

Chuse a warm dry soil, that has a good depth of light mould.

HAZZELLY, adj. Of the colour of hazel; a light brown.
Uplands consist either of land, gravel, chalk, or of stone, hazzelly loam, clay, or black mould.

HAZY, adj. [from haze.] Dark; foggy; misty.
Our clearest day here is misty and hazy; we tremble, and what we do see is in a bad light.

Of endanger'd by the hazy north,
Myriads on myriads, infect armies wait.
HE, pron. an. gen. him; plur. they; gen. them. [h, Dutch; he,
Saxon. It seems to have borrowed the plural from they, plural of he, dative him.]

1. The man that was named before.
All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar.
If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and encrease his passion;
Feed and regard him not.
I am weary of this moon; would he would change his light.
Adam spoke;
So cheer'd he his fair spouse, and she was cheer'd.
When Adam wak'd, he on his side
Leaning half rais'd hung over her.
Thus talking, hand in hand along they pass'd
On to their blissful bow'rs.

First
Him first, him last, him midst.

2. The man; the person. It sometimes stands without reference to any foregoing word.
He is never poor

That little hath, but he that much desires.

3. Man or male being.
Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
Is death to any he that utters them.
Ay, croak-back, here I stand to answer thee, or any proudcoit of thy sort.

'Tis and his race the sculptor shall employ,
And he the god who built the walls of Troy.

4. Male; as, a he bear, a he goat. It is used when the male and female have not different denominations.

The he's in birds have the fairest feathers.

In the two last senses he is rather a noun than a pronoun.

HEAD, n. f. [speayob, peay, Saxon; keph, Greek; keph, head, oil
English, whence by contraction head.]

1. The part of the animal that contains the brain and organs of sensation or thought.

Vein healing verven, and head purging dill.
Over head up-grew

Insufferable height of lustful shade.
My head geers off, what filthy work you make.

O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of beady murder, spoil and villany. Shakespeare.
I am advised what I say:
Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine,
Nor, beady rathi, provok'd with raging ire;
Albeit my wrong, might make one wiser mad. Shakespeare.
I'll forbear,
And am fall'n out with my more beady will,
To take the indispo'd and sickly fit
For the found man. Shakespeare.
Never came reformation in a flood
With such a beady current fow'ring faults;
Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his feat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shakespeare.
Wives, the readiest helps
To betray beady husbands, rob the easy. Ben. Johnson.
Men, naturally warm and beady, are transported with the greatest flush of good nature. Addison.

HEAT. n. f. [heat, æst, Saxon; hætt, Danish.]

1. The sensation caused by the approach or touch of fire.

Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object, which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot; so what in our sensation is heat, in the object is nothing but motion.

Locke.

The word heat is used to signify the sensation we have when we are near the fire, as well as the cause of that sensation, which is in the fire itself; and thence we conclude, that there is a sort of heat in the fire resembling our own sensation:
whereas in the fire there is nothing but little particles of matter, of such particular shapes as are fitted to impress such motions on our flesh as excite the sense of heat.

Watts.

2. The cause of the sensation of burning.

The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire.

Holzer.

After they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats which are there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to begin the custom of going naked.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

3. Hot weather.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;

The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;

Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain.

Dryden.

The pope would not comply with the proposal, as fearing the heats might advance too far before they had finished their work, and produce a pestilence among the people.

Addison.

4. State of any body under the action of the fire.

The heat smiths take of their iron are a blood-red heat,

a white flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat.

Moxon.

5. One violent action unintermitted.

The continual agitations of the spirits must needs be a weakening of any constitution, especially in age; and many causes are required for refreshment betwixt the heats.

Dryden.

6. The state of being once hot.

I'll strike my fortune with him at a heat,

And give him not the leisure to forget.

Dryden.

7. A course at a race, between each of which courses there is an intermission.

Feign'd zeal, you faw, let out the speedier pace;

But the last heat, plain dealing won the race.

Dryden.

8. Pimples in the face; flush.

It has raised animosities in their hearts, and heats in their faces, and broke out in their ribbons.

Addison.

9. Agitation of sudden or violent passion; vehemence of action.

They seeing what forces were in the city with them, issued against the tyrant while they were in this heat, before practices might be used to deliver them.

Sidney.

The friend hath lost his friend;

And the best quarrels, in the heat, are curst

By those that feel their sharpness.

Shakespeare.

It might have pleased in the heat and hurry of his rage, but must have displeased in the cool sedate reflections of his mind.

South's Sermons.

We have spilt no blood but in the heat of the battle, or the chafe.

Asterbury.

One playing at hazard, held in many hands together, and drew a huge heap of gold; but, in the heat of play, never observed a sharper, who swept in into his hat.

Swift.

10. Faction; contest; party rage.

Our fate thinks not so: they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

Shakespeare.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried.

King Charles.

What can more gratify the Phrygian foe

Than those distemper'd heats?

11. Ardour of thought or elocution.

Plead it to her

With all the strength and heats of eloquence,

Fraternal love and friendship can inspire.

Addison.

To HEAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make hot; to endue with the power of burning.

He commanded that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heated.

Daniel.

2. To cause to ferment.

Hops lying undried heats them, and changes their colour.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. To make the constitution feverish.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.

—Ay, to see meat fill knives, and wine heat fools.

Whatever increaseth the density of the blood, even without increasing its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer.

Arbutnot.

4. To warm with vehemence of passion or desire.

A noble emulation heats your breast.

And your own fame now robs you of your rest.

Dryden.

5. To agitate the blood and spirits with action.

When he was well heated, the younger champion could not stand before him; and we find the elder contended not for the gift, but for the honour.

Dryden.

HEATER. n. f. [from heat.] An iron made hot, and put into a box-iron, to smooch and plait linen.

HEATH. n. f. [eric, Latin.]

1. A plant.

It is a shrub of low stature: the leaves are small, and abide green all the year: the flower consists of one leaf, is naked, and, for the most part, shaped like a pitcher: the ovary, which is produced in the bottom of the flower, becomes a roundish fruit, divided into four cells, in which are contained many small seeds.

Miller.

In Kent they cut up the heath in May, burn it, and spread the ashes.

Mortimer.

Off with bolder wing they soaring dare

The purple heath.

Townson.

2. A place overgrown with heath.

Say, from whence

You owe this strange intelligence? or why

Upon this blasted heath you stop our way

With such prophetic greeting?

Shakespeare.

3. A place covered with shrubs of whatever kind.

Some woods of oranges, and heaths of rosemary, will smell a great way into the sea.

Bacon.

HEATH-COCK. n. f. [heath and cock.] A large fowl that frequents heaths.

Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge, pheasant, heath-cock, and pout.

Carew.

HEATH-POUT. n. f. [heath and pout.] A bird.

Not heath-pout, or the rarer bird

Which Phasis or Ionis yields

More pleasing mortals would afford

Than the fat olives of my fields.

Dryden.

HEATH-PEAS. n. f. A species of bitter Vetch, which see.

HEATH-ROSE. n. f. [heath and rose.] A plant.

Ansforth.

HEATHEN. n. f. [heiden, German.] The gentiles; the pagans; the nations unacquainted with the covenant of grace.

Deliver us from the heathen, that we may give thanks to thy holy name.

Charnick.

If the opinions of others, whom we think well of, be a ground of assent, men have reason to be heathen in Japan, mahometans in Turkey, papists in Spain, and protestants in England.

Locke.

In a paper of morality, I consider how I may recommend the particular virtues I treat of, by the precepts or examples of the ancient heathen.

Addison.

HEATHEN. adj. Gentile; pagan.

It was impossible for a heathen author to relate these things, because, if he had believed them, he would no longer have been a heathen.

Addison.

HEATHENISH. adj. [from heathen.]

1. Belonging to the gentiles.

When the apostles of our Lord and Saviour were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, chosen they were, St.
Paul excepted; the rest uneducated altogether, and unlettered men.

Hosier.

2. Wild; savage; rapacious; cruel.

The Moors did tread under their heathenish feet whatever little they found yet there standing.

sition to heathenism.

Hammond.

HEATHY. adj. [from heath.] Full of heath.

This sort of land they order the same way with the heathy land.

Mortimer.

To HEAVE. v. a. pret. heaved, anciently hove; part. heaved, or hoven.

1. To lift; to raise from the ground.

So stretch'd out huge in length the arch heaved lay,
Chain'd on the burning like; nor ever hence

H.

- Had heav'n, or heav'd his head, but that the will
And high permission of all ruling heaven
Left him at large. Milton.
2. To carry. Now we bear the king
Tow'r'd Calais: grant him there; and there being seen,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Athwart the sea. Shakespeare.
3. To raise; to lift. So daunted, when the giant saw the knight,
His heavy hand he heaved up on high,
And him to dust thought to have batter'd quite. Spenser.
Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
According to my bond, no more nor less. Shakespeare.
He dy'd in fight;
Fought next my person, as in comfort fought,
Save when he heav'd his shield in my defence,
And on his naked side receiv'd my wound. Dryden.
4. To cause to swell. The groans of ghosts, that cleave the earth with pain,
And heave it up: they pant and stick half way. Dryden.
The glittering finny swarms,
That heave our triums and crowd upon our shores. Tusson.
5. To force up from the breast. Made she no verbal quest?
—Yes, once or twice she heav'd the name of father
Pantingly forth, as if it prick'd her heart. Shakespeare.
The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans,
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting. Shakespeare.
6. To exalt; to elevate. Poor shadow, painted queen;
One heav'd on high, to be hurl'd down below. Shakespeare.
7. To puff; to elate. The Scots, heaved up into high hope of victory, took the English for foolish birds fallen into their net, forsook their hill, and marched into the plain. Heyward.
- TO HEAVE, v. n.
1. To pant; to breathe with pain. 'Tis such as you,
That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh
At each his needless heavings; such as you Nourish the cause of his awaking. Shakespeare.
He heaves for breath, which, from his lungs supply'd,
And fetch'd from far, diffends his lab'ring side. Dryden.
2. To labour. The church of England had struggled and heaved at a reformation ever since Wickliff's days. Atterbury.
3. To rise with pain; to swell and fall. Thou hast made my curdled blood run back,
My heart heave up, my hair to rise in bristles. Dryden.
The wond'ring breath was on the wing to part;
Weak was the pulse, and hardly heav'd the heart. Dryden.
No object affects my imagination so much as the sea or ocean; I cannot feel the heaving of this prodigious bulk of waters, even in a calm, without a very pleasing astonishment. Addison.
Frequent for breath his panting bosom heaves. Prior.
The heaving tide
In widen'd circles beats on either side. Gay.
4. To heave; to feel a tendency to vomit. HEAVE, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Lift; exertion or effort upwards. None could guess whether the next heave of the earthquake would settle them on the firm foundation, or swallow them. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
2. Rising of the breast. There's matter in these sighs; these profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them. Shakespeare.
3. Effort to vomit.
4. Struggle to rise. But after many strains and heaves,
He got up to his lodle caves. Hudibras.
- HEAVE OFFERING, n. f. An offering among the Jews. Ye shall offer a cake of the first of your dough for an heave offering, as ye do the heave offering of the threshing floor. Num.
- HEAVEN, n. f. [propon, which seems to be derived from heaven, the places over head, Saxons.]
1. The region above; the expanse of the sky. A station like the herald Mercury,
New lighted on a heaven kissing hill. Shakespeare.
The race in time to come
Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden.
The words are taken more properly for the air and ether than for the heavens, as the best Hebrews understand them. Raleigh's History of the World.
- This act, with shouts heav'n high, the friendly band
P. laud, Dryden.
2. The habitation of God, good angels, and pure souls dependent.
It is a knell
That summons thee to heaven, or to hell. Shakespeare.
Thee, the late
Heav'n banish'd host, left desert utmost hell.
All yet left of that revolted host,
Heav'n fall'n, in station stood, or just array,
Sublime with expectation. Milton.
3. The supreme power; the sovereign of heaven. Now heav'n help him!
The will
And high permission of all-ruling heav'n
Left him at large. Shakespeare.
The prophets were taught to know the will of God, and thereby instruct the people, and enabled to prophesy, as a testimony of their being sent by heaven. Jerome.
4. The pagan gods; the celestials. Our brows
No more obey the heavens than our couriers. Shakespeare.
Take physick, pomp;
Exploit thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show the heavens more just. Shakespeare.
They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heaven
Will not have earth to know. Shakespeare.
Heav'n! what a spring was in his arm, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow. Dryden.
5. Elevation; sublimity. O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heav'n of invention.
It is often used in composition. Shakespeare.
- HEAVEN-BEGOT. Begot by a celestial power. If I am heav'n-begot, assert your son
By some free sign. Dryden.
- HEAVEN-BORN. Descended from the celestial regions, name of heaven. If a fever fires his sulphurous blood,
In ev'ry fit he feels the hand of God,
And heav'n-born flame. Drake.
Oh heav'n-born sisters! source of art!
Who charm the sense, or mend the heart;
Who lead fair virtue's train along;
Moral truth, and mystic fong! Pope.
- HEAVEN-BRED. Produced or cultivated in heaven. Much is the force of heav'n-bred poetry. Shakespeare.
- HEAVEN-BUILT. Built by the agency of gods. My soul inspires.
As when we wrapt Troy's heav'n-built walls in fire. Pope.
His arms had wrought the destin'd fall
Of sacred Troy, and raz'd her heav'n-built wall. Pope.
- HEAVEN-DIRECTED.
1. Raised towards the sky. Who taught that heaven-directed spirit to rise? Pope.
2. Taught by the powers of heaven. O sacred weapon! left our truth's defence;
To all but heaven-directed hands deny'd;
The muse may give it, but the gods must guide. Pope.
- HEAVENLY, adj. [from heaven.]
1. Resembling heaven; supremely excellent. As the love of heaven makes one heavenly, the love of vi-tue virtuous, so doth the love of the world make one heavenly. Seneca.
worldly. Not Maro's muse, who sung the mighty man;
Nor Pindar's heav'nly lyre, nor Horace when a heavenly. Dryden.
2. Celestial; inhabiting heaven. Adoring first the genius of the place,
Then earth, the mother of the heav'nly race. Dryden.
- HEAVENLY, adv.
1. In a manner resembling that of heaven. In these deep solitudes and awful cells,
Where heav'nly pensive contemplation dwells,
And ever-musing melancholy reigns,
What means this tumult in a vestal's veins? Pope.
2. By the agency or influence of heaven. Truth and peace and love shall ever shine
About the supreme throne
Of him, whose happy-making light alone,
Our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.
- HEAVENWARD, adv. [heaven and ward, Saxons.] Towards heaven. I prostrate lay,
By various doubts impell'd, or to obey,
Or to object; at length, my mournful look Heav'nward erect, determin'd, thus I spoke. Pope.
- HEAVILY, adv. [from heav.]
1. With great ponderousness. Ease must be 'impracticable to the envious: they're under a double misfortune; common calamities and common heav- ings fall heavily upon them. Shakespeare.

3. Sorrowfully ; with an air of dejection.

I came hither to transport the tydings,

Which I have heavily born. Shakespeare.

Why looks your grace so heavily to-day ?

—O, I have past a miserable night.

This O'Neil took very heavily, because his condition in the army was less pleasant to him. Clarendon.

HEAVINESS. n. f. [from heavy.]

1. Ponderousness ; the quality of being heavy ; weight.

The subject is concerning the heaviness of several bodies, or the proportion that is required betwixt any weight and the power which may move it. Wilkins.

2. Dejection of mind ; depression of spirit.

We are, at the hearing of some, more inclined unto sorrow and heaviness ; of some more mollified, and softened in mind. Hooker.

Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it sloop ; but a good word maketh it glad. Proverbs.

Ye greatly rejoice ; though now for a season ye are in heaviness, through manifold temptations. 1 Peter.

Against ill chances men are ever merry ; But heaviness foretells the good event. Shakespeare.

Let us not burthen our remembrance with an heaviness that's gone. Shakespeare.

3. Inaptitude to motion or thought ; sluggishness ; torpidness ; dulness of spirit ; languidness ; languor.

Our strength is all gone into heaviness, That makes the weight. Shakespeare.

What means this heaviness that hangs upon me ? This lethargy that creeps through all my senses ! Addison.

He would not violate that sweet recess, And found besides a welcome heaviness, Which seiz'd his eyes. Dryden.

A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbutnot.

4. Oppression ; crush ; affliction.

5. Deepness or richness of soil.

As Alexandria exported many commodities, so it received some from other European ports, which, by reason of the fatness and heaviness of the ground, Egypt did not produce ; such as metals, wood, and pitch. Arbutnot.

HEAVY. adj. [heaviz, Saxon.]

1. Weighty ; ponderous ; tending strongly to the center ; contrary to light.

Mercennus tells us, that a little child, with an engine of an hundred double pulleys, might move this earth, though it were much heavier than it is. Wilkins.

2. Sorrowful ; dejected ; depressed.

Let me not be light ; For a light wife doth make a heavy husband. Shakespeare.

3. Grievous ; oppressive ; afflictive.

Menelaus bore an heavy hand over the citizens, having a malicious mind. Mac.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever, Which shall pollute them with the heaviness found That ever yet they heard. Shakespeare.

If the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make. Shakespeare.

Are you so gospell'd

To pray for this good man, and for his issue ? Whole heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave, And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakespeare.

Charters, at the levee, Tells with a sneer the tydings heavy. Swift.

4. Wanting alacrity ; wanting briskness of appearance.

My heavy eyes, you say, confess A heart to love and grief inclin'd. Prior.

Computing by the medical month, the first hebdomad or septenary consists of six days, seventeen hours and a half. Brann.

HEBDOMADAL. adj. [from hebdomas, Latin.] Weekly ; HEBDOMADARY. adj. consisting of seven days.

As for hebdomadal periods, or weeks, in regard of their sabbaths, they were observed by the Hebrews. Brann.

To HEBETATE. v. a. [hebetas, Latin ; hebetar, French.] To dull ; to blunt ; to stupify.

The eye, especially if hebetated, might cause the same perception. Harvey.

Beef may confer a robustness on the limbs of my son, but will hebetate and clog his intellectuals. Arbutnot and Pope.

HEBETATION. n. f. [from hebetate.]

1. The act of dulling.

2. The state of being dulled.

HEBETUS. n. f. [hebetus, Latin.] Dulness ; obtuseness ; bluntness.

The phlegmatic feminaries, according to their grossness or subtilty, activity, or hebetude, cause more or less truculent plagues. Harvey.

HEBRAISM. n. f. [hebraisme, French ; hebraismus, Latin.] A Hebrew idiom.

Milton has infused a great many Latinisms, as well as Grecisms, and sometimes Hebraisms, into his poem. Spectator.

HEBRAIST. n. f. [hebraeus, Latin.] A man skilled in Hebrew.

HEBRICAN. n. f. [from Hebrew.] One skillful in Hebrew.

The words are more properly taken for the air or ether than the heavens, as the best Hebraicisms understand them. Raleigh.

The nature of the Hebrew verse, as the meanest Hebraic knoweth, consists of uneven feet. Peacham.

HECATOMBS. n. f. [hecatombis, French ; hecatombis, Latin.] A sacrifice of an hundred cattle.

In rich mens homes I bid kill some beasts, but no hecatombs ; None slave, none fuscit fox. Donne.

One of these three is a whole hecatomb, And therefore only one of them shall die. Dryden.

Her triumphant fons in war succeed, And slaughter'd hecatombs around 'em bleed. Addison.

HECTICAL. adj. [hectique, French, from hēctē.]

HECTICK. adj. [hectique, French, from hēctē.]

1. Habitual ; constitutional.

This word is joined only to that kind of fever which is slow and continual, and ending in a consumption, is the contrary to those fevers which arise from a plethora, or too great fulness from obstruction, because it is attended with too lax a state of the excretory passages, and generally those of the skin ; whereby so much runs off as leaves not resistance enough in the contractile vessels to keep them sufficiently distended, so that they vibrate oftener, agitate the fluids the more, and keep them thin and hot. Quincy.

A hectic fever hath got hold Of the whole substance, not to be controul'd. Donne.

2. Troubled with a morbid heat.

No hectic student fears the gentle maid. Taylor.

Like the hectic in my blood he rages, And thou must cure me. Shakespeare.

HECTOR. n. f. [from the name of Hector, the great Homeric warrior.]

1. A bully ; a blustering, turbulent, perversicuous, noisy fellow.

Those usurping hecters, who pretend to honour without religion, think the charge of a lye a blot not to be washed out but by blood. South.

We'll take one cooling cup of nectar, And drink to this celestial hecter. Prior.

To HECTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To threaten ; to treat with insolent authoritative terms.

They reckon they must part with honour together with their opinion, if they suffer themselves to be hectured out of it. Government of the Tongue.

The weak low spirit, fortune makes her slave ; But she's a drudge, when hecter'd by the brave. Dryden.

An honest man, when he came home at night, found another fellow domineering in his family, hecting his servants, and calling for supper. Arbutnot.

7. HEDTOR. v. n. To play the bully; to bluster.

They have attacked me, some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and hedting, others scolding and reviling. Stillingfleet.
One would think the hedting, the storming, the fullen, and all the different species of the angry, should be cured. Spelt.

Don Carlos made her chief director,
That she might o'er the servants hedder. Swift.

HEDERACEOUS. adj. [hederaceus, Lat.] Producing ivy. Diët.
HEDGE. n. f. [hæge, Saxon.] A fence made round grounds with prickly bushes.

It is a good wood for fire, if kept dry; and is very useful for stakes in hedges. Mortimer.

The gardens unfold variety of colours to the eye every morning, and the hedges breath is beyond all perfume. Pope.

Through the verdant maze

Of sweet-briar hedges I pursue my walk. Thomson.

HEDGE, prefixed to any word, notes something mean, vile, of the lowest class: perhaps from a hedge, or hedge-born man, a man without any known place of birth.

There are five in the first shew: the pedant, the braggart, the hedge-prig, the fool, and the boy. Shakespeare.

The clergy do much better than a little hedge, contemptible, illiterate vicar can be presumed to do. Swift.

A person, who, by his file and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge-prig in Little Britain, proceeded gradually to an author. Swift.

7. HEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inclose with a hedge, or fence of wood dry or growing.
Hedge thy position about with thorns. Exodus.

Thou'lt ally'st must be hedged at both ends, to keep out the wind. Bacon.

2. To obstruct.
I will hedge up thy way with thorns. Hof.

3. To incircle for defence.
England, hedged in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes. Shakespeare.

There's such divinity doth hedge a king,

That treason can but peep to what it would. Shakespeare.

4. To thrust up within an inclosure.
It must not be paid and exported in ready money; so says our law; but that is a law to hedge in the cuckoo, and serves for no purpose: for if we export not goods, for which our merchants have money due to them, how can it be paid by bills of exchange? Locke.

5. To force into a place already full. This seems to be mistaken for edge. To edge in, is to put in by the way that requires least room; but hedge may signify to thrust in with difficulty, as into a hedge.

Bay not me,

I'll not endure it: you forgot yourself

To hedge me in: I am a soldier. Shakespeare.

When I was hasty, thou hedged me longer:

I pe'three, let me hedge one moment more

Into thy promise; for thy life prefe're'd. Dryden.

When you are fawn on an errand, be sure to hedge in some business of your own. Swift.

7. HEDGE. v. n. To shift; to hide the head.
I myself sometimes, hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch? and yet you rogue will enconce your rage, your catamountain looks, your red-lettice phrafs. Shakespeare.

HEDGE-BORN. adj. [hedge and born.] Of no known birth; meanly born.

He then, that is not furnish'd in this fort,

Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight;

And should, if I were worthy to be judge,

Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born twain,

That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shakespeare.

HEDGE-FUMITORY. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HOG. n. f. [hedge and hog.]

1. An animal fet with prickles, like thorns in a hedge.
Like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their pricks at my foot-fall. Shakespeare.

Few have belief to swallow, or hope enough to experience, the collumry of Albertus; that is, to make one see in the dark: yet thus much, according unto his receipt, will the right eye of an hedge-hog, boiled in oil, and preserved in a brazen vessel, effect. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The hedge-hog hath his backside and flanks thick fet with strong and sharp prickles; and besides, by the help of a muf-cule, can contract himself into a globular figure, and so withdraw his whole under part, head, belly and legs, within his thicket of prickles. Ray.

2. A term of reproach.
Didst thou not kill this king?
— I grant ye.

— Do'st grant me, hedge-hog? Shakespeare.

3. A plant. Ainsworth.

4. The globe-fish. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HYSSOP. n. f. [hedge and hysop.] A species of wet low-wort.

Hedge-hysop is a purging medicine, and a very rough one; externally it is said to be a vulnerary.

HEDGE-MUSTARD. n. f. A plant.

The flower has four leaves, expanded in a crucial form: the pointed becomes a long, slender, bivalve pod, divided by a partition into two cells, which contain many round seeds.

The species are five. Miller.

HEDGE-NETTLE. n. f. A plant.

HEDGE-NOTE. n. f. [hedge and note.] A word of caution for low writing.

When they began to be somewhat better bred, they left their hedge-notes for another sort of poem, which we do not of pleasant railery.

HEDGE-PIG. n. f. [hedge and pig.] A young hedge hog.

Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd,
Thrice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shakespeare.

HEDGE-ROW. n. f. [hedge and row.] The series of trees or bushes planted for inclosures.

Sometimes walking not unseen
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green.
The fields in the northern side are divided by hedge-rows of myrtle. Arden.

HEDGE-SPARROW. n. f. [hedge and sparrow.] A sparrow that lives in bushes.

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakespeare.

HE'DGING-BILL. n. f. [hedge and bill.] A cutting hawk used in making hedges.

Comes maller Dametas with a hedge-bill in his hand, chaffing and swearing. Shakespeare.

HE'DGER. n. f. [from hedge.] One who makes hedges.

The labour'd ox
In his loose traces from the furrow came,
And the swink'd hedger at his supper fat. Milton.

He would be laughed at, that should go about to make a fine dancer out of a country hedger at past time. Locke.

7. HEED. v. a. [heban, Saxon.] To mind; to regard; to take notice of; to attend.

With pleasure Argus the musician heeds;
But wonders much at those new vocal recs. Dryden.

He will no more have clear ideas of all the operations of his mind, than he will have all the particular views of any landscape or clock, who will not turn his eyes to it, and his attention heed all the parts of it. Locke.

HEED. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Care; attention.
With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running. Milton.

Thou must take heed, my Portius;

The world has all its eyes on Cato's son. Alfieri.

2. Caution; fearful attention; suspicious watch.
Either wife bearing or ignorant carriage is caught to reach catch diseases, one of another; therefore, let men take heed in their company. Shakespeare.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do feed by sight.

Take heed, ere Summer comes, or cuckoo birds sing. Shakespeare.

Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. Care to avoid.
We should take heed of the neglect or contempt of his worship. Bayle.

4. Notice; observation.
Speech must come by hearing and learning; and heed give more heed, and mark words more than beats. Bacon.

5. Seriousness; staidness.
He did unfeal them, and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind; a heed Shakespeare.

Was in his countenance.

6. Regard; respectful notice.
It is a way of calling a man a fool, when he heeds in jest to what he says. L'Estrange.

HE'DFUL. adj. [from heed.]

1. Watchful; cautious; suspicious.
Give him heedful note;
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;
And, after, we will both our judgments join,
In censure of his seeming. Shakespeare.

2. Attentive; careful; observing.
I am commanded
To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
Where fame, late entering at his heedful ears,
Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue. Shakespeare.

To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other. Shakespeare.

Thou, heedful of advice, secure proceed;
My praise the precept is, be thine the deed. Pope.

HE'DFULLY. adv. [from heedful.] Attentively; carefully; cautiously.

The heedless lover does not know

Whose eyes they are that would him fo. Waller.

Heedless of verse, and hopeless of the crown,

Scarce half a wit, and more than half a clown. Dryden.

Some ideas, which have more than once offered themselves to the senses, have yet been little taken notice of; the mind being either heedless, as in children, or otherwise employed, as in men. Lect.

HEEDLESSLY. adv. [from heedless.] Carelessly; negligently; inattentively. Watts.

Whilst ye discharge the duty of matrimony, ye heedlessly slide into sin. Arbutnot and Pope.

HEEDLESSNESS. n. f. [from heedless.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; inattention. Watts.

In the little harms they suffer from knocks and falls, they should not be pained, but bid do so again; which is a better way to cure their heedfulness. Lect.

HEEL. n. f. [Heel, Saxon.]

1. The part of the foot that protuberates behind. He calls to mind his strength, and then his speed,

His winged heels, and then his armed head;

With these 't' avoid, with that his fate to meet;

But fear prevails, and bids him trust his feet. Denham.

If the luxated bone be distorted backward, it lieth over the heel bone. Wifeman.

2. The whole foot of animals. Pegasus appeared hanging off the side of a rock, with a fountain running from his heel. Addison.

3. The feet, as employed in flight. Nothing is commoner, in times of danger, than for men to leave their masters to bears and tigers, and shew them a fair pair of heels for't.

4. To be at the HEELS. To pursue closely; to follow hard. Sir, when comes your book forth?

—Upon the heels of my presentment. Shakespeare.

But is there no sequel at the heels of this Mother's admiration? Shakespeare.

Could we break our way By force, and at our heels all hell should rise

With blackest infurrection, to confound

Heav'n's purest light. Milton.

5. To pursue as an enemy. The Spaniards fled on towards the North to seek their fortunes, being still chased by the English navy at their heels until they were fain to give them over for want of powder. Bacon.

Want I hungry want! that hungry meagre fiend,

Is at my heels, and chases me in view. Ottway.

6. To follow close as a dependent. Through proud London he came sighing on,

After th' admird heels of Bolingbroke. Shakespeare.

7. To lay by the HEELS. To fetter; to shackle; to put in gyes. If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all

By th' heels, and suddenly; and on your heads

Clap round fines for neglect. Shakespeare.

One half of man, his mind,

Is, sui juris, unconfin'd,

And cannot be laid by the heels. Hudibras.

I began to smoke that they were a parcel of mummies; and wondered that none of the Middlesex justices took care to lay some of them by the heels. Addison.

8. Any thing shaped like a heel. At the other side is a kind of heel or knob, to break clots with.

9. The back part of a shodden; whence the phrase to be out at heels, to be worn out.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard;

Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle:

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels. Shakespeare.

HEEL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance. I cannot sing,

Nor heel the high lavalot, nor sweeten talk. Shakespeare.

2. To lean on one side: as, the rest I'll whistle.

HEELER. n. f. [from heel.] A cock that strikes well with his heels.

HEFT. n. f. [from heave.]

1. Heaving; effort. May be in the cup.

A spider sleep'd, and one may drink; depart,

And yet partake no venom; for his knowledge Is not infected: but if one prevent

Th' abhor'd ingredient to his eye, make known

How he hath drunk, he cracks his gorge, his sides

With violent hefts. Shakespeare.

2. [For heft.] Handle. His only side devours both blade and heft. Waller.

HE'GIRA. n. f. [Arabic.] A term in chronology, signifying the epocha, or account of time, used by the Arabs and Turks, who begin their computation from the day that Mahomet was forced to make his escape from the city of Mecca, which happened on Friday July 16, A. D. 622, under the reign of the emperor Heradui. Harris.

HE'IFER. n. f. [pea; one, Saxon.] A young cow.

Who finds the heifer dead and bleeding fresh,

And fees fast by a butcher with an ax,

But will suspect 'twas he that made the slaughter? Shakespeare.

A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air, against rain. Bacon.

For her the flocks refuse their verdant food,

Nor thrifty heifers seek the gliding flood. Pope.

HEIGH-MO. interj.

1. An expression of slight languour and uneasiness. Heigh-mo! an't be not four by the day, I'll be hang'd. Shak.

2. It is used by Dryden, contrarily to custom, as a voice of exultation. Well toff off our ale 'till we cannot stand,

And heigh-bo for the honour of old England. Dryden.

HEIGHT. n. f. [from high.]

1. Elevation above the ground; any place assigned. Into what pit thou see'st,

From what height fall'n. Milton.

2. Altitude; space measured upwards. Abroad I'll study thee,

As he removes far off, that great heights takes. Donne.

There is in Tivcium, in Italy, a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height not fifty.

Bacon's Natural History.

An amphitheatre appear'd,

Rais'd in degrees, to sixty paces rear'd;

That when a man was plac'd in one degree,

Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryden.

An amphitheatre's amazing height

Here fills the eye with terror and delight. Addison.

3. Degree of latitude. Guinea lieth to the North sea, in the same height as Peru to the South. Abbot.

4. Summit; ascent; towering eminence. From Alpine heights the father first descends;

His daughter's husband in the plain attends. Dryden.

Every man of learning need not enter into their difficulties, nor climb the heights to which some others have arrived. Watts.

5. Elevation of rank; station of dignity. By him that rais'd me to this careful height,

From that contented hap which I enjoy'd,

I never did incense his majesty

Against Clarence. Shakespeare.

Ten kings had from the Norman conqueror reign'd,

When England to her greatest height attain'd,

Of pow'r, dominion, glory, wealth and state. Daniel.

6. The utmost degree; full completion. Putrefaction doth not rise to its height at once.

Did not the

Of Tinna first betray me, and reveal

The secret, wrict from me in the height

Of nuptial love profess'd? Milton.

Hide me from the face

Of God, whom to behold was then my height

Of happiness! Milton.

7. Utmost exertion. Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding. Shakespeare.

8. State of excellence; advance towards perfection. Social duties are carried to greater heights, and enforced with stronger motives, by the principles of our religion. Addison.

To HEIGHTEN. v. a. [from height.]

1. To raise higher.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

3. To aggravate. Foreign states gave us their assistance in reducing our country to a state of peace; and which of them used their endea-ours to heighten our confusions, and plunge us into all the evils of a civil war? Addison.

4. To improve by decorations. As in a room, contrived for state, the height of the roof should bear a proportion to the area; so in the heightenings of poetry, the strength and vehemence of figures should be suited to the occasion. Dryden.

HEINOUS. adj. [haineux, French, from bain, hate; or from the Teutonic hoon, flame.] Atrocious; wicked in a high degree. To abrogate or innovate the gospel of Christ, if men or

angels

angels should attempt, it were most heinous and accursed sacrilege. Hooker.

This is the man should do the bloody deed :

The image of a wicked heinous fault

Lives in his eye. Shakespeare.

As it is a most heinous, so it is a most dangerous impiety to despise him that can destroy us. Tillotson.

He'INOUSLY. adv. [from heinous.] Atrociously; wickedly.

He'INOUSNESS. n. f. [from heinous.] Atrociousness; wickedness.

He who can treat offences provoking to God as jests and trifles, must have very little sense of the heinousness of them. Rogeri's Sermons.

HEIR. n. f. [heire, old Fr. heret, Latin.] One that is inheritor of any thing after the present possessor.

An heir signifies the eldest, who is, by the laws of England, to have all his father's land. Locke.

What lady is that?

—The heir of Alaision, Rosaline her name. Shakespeare.

That I'll give my voice on Richard's side,

To bar my maller's heirs in true descent,

God knows, I will not do it. Shakespeare.

Being heirs together of the grace of life. Peter.

The young extravagant heir had got a new steward, and was resolved to look into his estate before things grew desperate. Swift.

Sunk is the hero, and his glory lost,

And I his heir in misery alone. Pope.

The heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and a tenderness in their constitutions. Swift.

To HEIR. v. a. [from the noun.] To inherit.

His sons in blooming youth were snatch'd by fate;

One only daughter heir'd the royal state. Dryden.

He'IRESS. n. f. [from heir.] An inheritrix; a woman that inherits.

An heiress she, while yet alive;

All that was her's to him did give. Waller.

Æneas, though he married the heiress of the crown, yet claimed no title to it during the life of his father-in-law. Dryd.

He'IRLESS. adj. [from heir.] Without an heir; wanting one to inherit after him.

I still think of

The wrong I did myself; which was so much,

That heir's it hath made my kingdom. Shakespeare.

He'IRSHIP. n. f. [from heir.] The state, character, or privileges of an heir.

A layman appoints an heir or an executor in his will, to build an hospital within a year, under pain of being deprived of his heirship. Ayliffe.

He'IRLOOM. n. f. [heir and zeloma, goods, Sax.] Any furniture or moveable decreed to descend by inheritance, and therefore inalienable from the freehold.

Achilles' sceptre was of wood,

Transmitted to the hero's line;

Thence through a long descent of kings

Came an heirloom, as Homer sings. Swift.

HELD. The pretence and part pass. of hold.

A rich man beginning to fall, is held up of friends. Ecclus.

If Minerva had not appeared and held his hand, he had executed his design. Dryden.

HELIACAL. adj. [heliacque, Fr. from ἥλιος.] Emerging from the lustre of the sun, or falling into it.

Had they ascribed the heat of the season to this star, they would not have computed from its heliacal ascent. Brown.

He'LIACALLY. adv. [from heliacal.]

From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but heliacally, that is, its emergence from the rays of the sun, the ancients computed their canicular days. Brown.

He is tempestuous in the Summer, when he rises heliacally;

and rainy in the Winter, when he rises achronically. Dryden.

He'LIICAL. adj. [helic, Fr. from ἥλιος.] Spiral; with many circumsolutions.

The screw is a kind of wedge, multiplied or continued by a helic revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not by any stroke, but from a velle at one end of it. Willins.

He'LIOD Parabolæ, in mathematics, or the parabolick spiral, is a curve which arises from the supposition of the axis of the common Apollonian parabola's being bent round into the periphery of a circle, and is a line then passing through the extremities of the ordinates, which do now converge towards the centre of the said circle. Harrii.

He'LIOTROPIC. adj. [heliocentrique, Fr. ἥλιος and τροπή.] The heliocentrick place of a planet is said to be such as it would appear to us from the sun, if our eye were fixed in its centre. Harrii.

He'LIOTROPE. n. f. [ἥλιος and τροπή; heliotrope, French; heliotropium, Latin.] A plant that turns towards the sun; but more particularly the turansol, or sun-flower.

'Tis a common observation of flatterers, that they are like the heliotrope; they open only towards the sun, but shut and contract themselves at night, and in cloudy weather. Government of the Tongue.

He'LIOSPHERICAL. adj. [helic and sphere.]

The heliospherical line is the rhomb line in navigation, and is so called because on the globe it winds round the pole spirally, and still comes nearer and nearer to it, but never terminates in it. Harrii.

He'LIX. n. f. [helic, Fr. ἥλιος.] A spiral line; a circutation.

Find the true inclination of the screw, together with the certain quantity of water which every helic does contain. Willins's Description.

HELL. n. f. [pelle, Saxon.]

1. The place of the devil and wicked souls.

For it is a knell

That summons thee to heaven, or to hell. End. Scene.

If a man were a porter of hell gates, he should have old turning the key. Shakespeare.

Let none admire

That riches grow in hell; that soil may sell

Deserve the precious bane. Idem.

Hell's black tyrant trembled to behold

The glorious light he forfeited of gold. Idem.

took me. Idem.

4. The place at a running play to which those who are caught are carried.

Then couples three be straight allotted there;

They of both ends the middle two do fly;

The two that in mid-place, hell called were,

Must strive with waiting foot, and watching eye,

To catch of them, and them to hell to bear;

That they, as well as they, hell may supply. Idem.

5. The place into which the taylor throws his scraps.

This trusty squire, he had, as well

As the bold Trojan knight, seen hell;

Not with a counterfeit piece

Of golden hoogh, but true gold lace. Idem.

In Covent-garden did a taylor dwell,

Who might deserve a place in his own hell. Idem.

6. The infernal powers.

Much danger first, much did he sustain,

While Saul and hell crost his strong fate in rain. Idem.

7. It is used in composition by the old writers more than it is modern.

HELL-BLACK. adj. Black as hell.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head

In hell-black night endur'd, would have build'd up.

And quenched the stilled fires. Idem.

HELL-BRED. adj. [hell and bred.] Produced in hell.

Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,

With foul ensouled frowns and flashing eyes,

The hell-bred beast threw forth upon the skies. Idem.

HELL-BROTHER. n. f. [hell and brother.] A composition hell'd up for infernal purposes.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,

Lizard's leg, and owl's wing;

For a charm of pow'ful trouble,

Like a hell-broth boil and bubble. Idem.

HELL-DOOMED. adj. [hell and doom.] Consigned to hell.

And reckon't thou thyself with spirits of hell;

Hell-doom'd! and breath't defiance here and there.

Where I reign king! Idem.

HELL-GOVERNED. adj. Directed by hell.

Earth gape open wide and eat him quick,

As thou do'st swallow up this good king's blood,

Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butcher'd. Idem.

HELL-HATED. adj. Abhorred like hell.

Back do I tose thee treasons to thy head,

With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart. Idem.

HELL-HAUNTED. adj. [hell and haunt.] Haunted by the devil.

Fierce Olmond clos'd me in the bleeding bark,

And bid me stand expos'd to the bleak winds,

And Winter's storms, and heav'n's inclemency,

Bound to the fate of this hell-haunted grove. Idem.

HELL-HOUND. n. f. [pelle puny, Saxon.]

1. Dogs of hell.

Thou had'st a Clarence too, and Richard kill'd him:

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept

A hell-hound, that doth hunt us all to death. Idem.

Now the hell-hounds with superior speed

Had reach'd the dame, and, fast'ning on her side,

The ground with issuing streams of purple dy'd. Idem.

2. Agent of hell.

HEL

I call'd

My hell-hounds to lick up the draft, and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure.

Milton.

HELL-KITE. n. f. [hell and kite.] Kite of infernal breed. The term hell prefixed to any word denotes detestation.

All my pretty ones!

Did you pay all? What all? Oh, hell-kite! all?

What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,

At one fell swoop?

Shakspeare.

HELLEBORUS. n. f. [helleborus, Latin.] Christmas flower.

It hath a digitated leaf: the flower consists of several leaves placed obliquely, and expanding in form of a rose: in the centre of the flower rises the pointal, encompassed about the base with several little horns between the chives and petals, which turn to a fruit, in which the membranaceous hulks are gathered into a little head, ending in an horn, opening long-wile, and full of roundish or oval seeds.

Miller.

HELLEBORUS. n. f. [veratrum, Latin.] A plant.

The flower is naked, confining of six leaves, expanding in form of a rose: in the middle arises the pointal, surrounded by six threads, which turn to a fruit: in which three membranaceous sheaths are gathered into a little head, and are full of oblong seeds resembling a grain of wheat, and compassed by a leafy wing.

Miller.

There are great doubts whether any of its species be the true helleborus of the ancients.

Miller.

Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,

That they may crush down with a heavy fall

Th' usurping helmet of our adversaries.

Shakspeare.

Scov'n darts are thrown at once, and some rebound

From his bright shield, some on his helmet found.

Dryden.

HELMSTHICK. adj. [from helmstet.] Relating to worms.

Dick.

TO HELP. v. a. preter. helped, or hep; part. helped, or helpen.

[hilpan, Gothic; helfan, Saxon.]

1. To assist; to support; to aid.

Let us work as valiant men behave;

For boldest hearts good fortune helpeth out.

God helped him against the Philistines.

They helped them in all things with silver and gold.

A man reads his prayers out of a book, as a means to help his understanding and direct his expectations.

This he conceives not hard to bring about,

If all of you should join to help him out.

What I offer is so far from doing any diskindness to the cause these gentlemen are engaged in, that it does them a real service, and helps them out with the main thing whereat they stuck.

The god of learning and of light,

Would want to god himself to help him out.

2. To remove, or advance by help.

Woe to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up.

 1. Belonging to a female; of a fit; or of a woman.

About his neck
 A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
 Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
 The opening of his mouth. Shakspeare.
 Still new favourites she chose,
 'Till up in arms my passion rofe,
 And cast away her yoke. Cowley.
 One month, three days, and half an hour,
 Judith held the foreign pow'r;
 Wond'rous beautiful her face;
 But so weak and small her wit,
 That she to govern were unfit,
 And so Sannaia took her place. Cowley.

2. The oblique case of she.
 England is fo idly king'd,
 Her sceptre so fanatically borne,
 That her attends her not. Shakspeare.
 She cannot seem deform'd to me,
 And I would have her seem to others fo.
 The moon arose clad o'er in light,
 With thousand stars attending on her train;
 With her flies, with her set again;
 Should I be left, and should be lost, the sea,
 That bury'd her lov'd, should bury me. Dryden.
HER. pronoun. This is used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, such are her charms, such charms are her.

This pride of her,
 Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her. Shakspeare.
 Thine own worthiness,
 Will still that thou art mine not her confess. Cowley.
 Some secret charm did all her acts attend,
 And what his fortune wanted, her could mend. Dryden.

 1. To run in herds or companies.
 Weak women should, in danger, herd like deer. Dreux.

HER

It is the nature of indigency, like common danger, to endear men to one another, and make them herd together, like fellow-failors in a storm. Norris.

2. To associate.

I'll herd among his friends, and seem

One of the number. Addison.

Run to towns, to herd with knaves and fools,

And undistinguish'd pass among the crowd. Walpole.

To HERD. v. a. To throw or put into an herd.

The rest,

However great we are, honest and valiant,

Are herded with the vulgar. Ben. Jonson.

HERDROOM. n. f. [herd and room.] A keeper of herds.

But who shall judge the wager won or lost?

That shall yonder herdsgroom, and none other,

Which over the possie hitherward doth post. Spenser.

HERDSMAN. } n. f. [herd and man.] One employed in tend-

HERDSMAN. } ing herds; formerly, an owner of herds.

A herdsman rich, of much account was he,

In whom no evil did reign, or good appear. Sidney.

And you, enchantment,

Worthy enough a herdsman, if e'er thou

Thy rural latches to his entrance open,

I will devise a death cruel for thee. Shakespeare.

Scarce themselves know how to hold

A sheephook, or have learn'd ought else the least

To the faithful herdsman's art belongs. Milton.

There oft the Indian herdsman, thunning heat,

Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds

At loop-holes cut through thickest shade. Milton.

So stands a Thracian herdsman with his spear

Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden.

The herdsman, round

The cheerful fire, provoke his health in goblets crown'd.

Dryden's Virgil's Georgicks.

When their herdsman could not agree, they parted by consent. Lodge.

HERE. adv. [per, Saxon; hier, Dutch.]

1. In this place.

Before thy here approach,

Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,

All ready at appoint, was setting forth. Shakespeare.

I, upon my frontiers here,

Keep residence. Milton.

Here nature first begins

Her farthest verge. Milton.

How wretched does Prometheus' state appear,

While he his second misery suffers here!

To-day is ours, we have it here. Cowley.

2. In the present state.

Thus shall you be happy here, and more happy hereafter.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Then here's for earnest:

'Tis finish'd, and the dusk that yet remains

Is but the native horror of the wood. Dryden.

However, friend, here's to the king, one cries;

To him who was the king, the friend replies. Prior.

4. It is often opposed to there. Dispers'd; in one place and another.

Good-night: mine eyes do itch;

Doth that bode weeping?

—'Tis neither here nor there. Shakespeare.

We are come to see thee fight, to see thee foigne, to see thee traive, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shakespeare.

Then this, then that man's aid, they crave, implore;

Post here for help, seek there their followers. Daniel.

I would have in the heath some thickets made only of sweet briar and honey-suckle, and some wild vine amongst; and the ground set with violets; for these are sweet, and prosper in the shade; and these to be in the heath here and there, not in order. Bacon.

The devil might perhaps, by inward suggestion, have drawn in here and there a single profelyte. Gower, of the Yngus.

You remember how your city, after the dreadful fire, was rebuild, not precisely, by raising continued streets in any one part; but at first here a house, and there a house, to which others by degrees were joined. Spratt.

He that rides post through a country may be able to give some loose description of here a mountain and there a plain, here a morass and there a river, woodland in one part, and savanas in another. Lodge.

5. Here seems, in the following passage, to mean this place.

Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkid;

Thou lovest here, a better where to find. Shakespeare.

HEREABOUTS. adv. [here and about.] About this place.

I saw hereabouts nothing remarkable, except Augustus's bridge. Addison in Italy.

HEREAFTER. adv. [here and after.]

1. In time to come; in futurity.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own heart y. Shakespeare.

N° LXXIX.

HER

The grand-child, with twelve sons increas'd, depart's
From Canaan, to aland hereafter call'd Egypt. Milton.

Hereafter he from war shall come,

And bring his Trojans peace. Dryden.

2. In a future state.

HEREAFTER. n. f. A future state.

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;

'Tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter,

And intimates eternity to man. Addison.

I kill shall wait

Some new hereafter, and a future state. Prior.

HEREAFTER. adv. [here and at.] At this.

One man coming to the tribune, to receive his donative, with a gatland in his hand, the tribune, offended hereat, demanded what this singularity could mean. Hosier.

HEREBY. adv. [here and by.] By this.

In what estate the fathers rested, which were dead before, it is not hereby either one way or other determined. Hosier.

Hereby the Moors are not excluded by beauty, there being in this description no consideration of colours. Brown.

The acquisition of truth is of infinite concernment: hereby

we become acquainted with the nature of things. Watts.

HERE'DITABLE. adv. [heres, Latin.] Whatever may be occu-

ped as inheritance.

Adam being neither a monarch, nor his imaginary monarchy hereditary, the power which is now in the world is not that which was Adam's. Lodge.

HEREDITAMENT. n. f. [hereditum, Latin.] A law term denoting inheritance, or hereditary estate.

HEREDITARY. adj. [hereditaire, French; hereditarius, Lat.]

Possessed or claimed by right of inheritance; descending by inheritance.

To thee and thine, hereditary ever,

Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom. Shakespeare.

'I heie old fellows

Have their ingratitude in them hereditary. Shakespeare.

He shall ascend

The throne hereditary, and bound his reign

With earth's wide bounds, his glory with the heav'ns. Milton.

Thus while the mute creation downward bend

Their fight, and to their earthly mother tend,

Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes

Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden.

When heroic verse his youth shall raise,

And form it to hereditary praise. Dryden.

HERE'DITARILY. adv. [from hereditary.] By inheritance.

Here is another, who thinks one of the greatest glories of his father was to have distinguished and loved you, and who loves you hereditarily. Pope to Swift.

HEREIN. adv. [here and in.] In this.

How highlysoever it may please them with words of truth to extol sermons, they shall not herein offend us. Hosier.

My best endeavours shall be done herein. Shakespeare.

Since truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves, herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

HEREINTO. adv. [here and into.] Into this.

Because the point about which we strive is the quality of our laws, our first entrance hereinto cannot better be made than with consideration of the nature of law in general. Hosier.

HEREOF. adv. [here and of.] From this; of this.

Hereof comes it that prince Harry is valiant. Shakespeare.

HEREON. adv. [here and on.] Upon this.

into question. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HEREOUT. adv. [here and out.]

1. Out of this place.

A bird all white, well feather'd on each wing

Hereout up to the throne of God did fly. Spenser.

2. All the words compounded of here and a preposition, except hereafter, are obsolete, or obsolescent; never used in poetry, and seldom in prose, by elegant writers, though perhaps not unworthy to be retained.

HERMITICAL. adj. [It should be written heremital, from her- mite, of herem, a desert; heremique, French.] Solitary; suitable to a hermit.

You describe so well your heremital state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you for a cave in a rock. Pope.

HERESY. n. f. [heresie, French; heresis, Latin; hairesis.]

An opinion of private men different from that of the catholic and orthodox church.

Hereby prevail'd only by a counterfeit shew of reason, whereby notwithstanding it becometh invincible, unless it be convicted of fraud by manifest remembrance clearly true, and unable to be withstood. Hosier.

As for speculative heresies, they work mightily upon mens wits; yet they do not produce any great alterations in states.

Bacon, Essay 59.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgment, not in the odious disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and dissipation. King Charles.

HERESARCH. n. f. [heresarch, French; ἡρσάρχης and ἡρσάρχης.] A leader in heresy; the head of a herd of heretics.

The pope declared him not quite an heretic, but an heresarch. Stillingsfleet.

HERETICK. n. f. [heretique, Fr. hérétique.] One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholic church.

I rather will suspect the fun with cold

Than thee with wantonness; thy honour stands,

In him that was of late an heretick, Shakespeare.

As from as faith. Shakespeare.

These things would be prevented, if no known heretick or schismatic be suffered to go into those countries. Lacon.

No heretick desire to spread Davies.

Their wild opinions like these Epicures. Davies.

Bellarmin owns, that he has quoted a heretick instead of a father. Baker.

When a Popist uses the word hereticks, he generally means

Protestants; when a Protestant uses the word, he means any persons wilfully and contentiously obdurate in fundamental errors. Watts.

HERETICAL. adj. [from heretick.] Containing heresy.

How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible even for him to be, as touching his own personal persuasion, heretical, who in their opinion not only is of the church, but holdeth the chiefest place of authority over the same? Hosker.

Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that those words had some heretical meaning. Decey of Piety.

HERETICALLY. adv. [from heretick.] With heresy.

HERETIC. adv. [here and to.] To this; add to this.

HERETOFORE. adv. [hereto and fore.] Formerly; anciently.

Lord Amelius said she, I have long desired to know you heretofore, with honouring your virtue, though I love not your person. Sidney.

So near is the connection between the civil state and religious,

that heretofore you will find the government and the priesthood united in the same person. South.

We now can form no more

Long schemes of life, as heretofore. Swift.

HERETO. adv. [here and unto.] To this.

They which rightly consider after what sort the heart of man hereto is framed, must of necessity acknowledge, that whose affineth to the words of eternal life, doth it in regard of his authority whose words they are. Hosker.

Agreeable hereto it might not be amiss to make children, as soon as they are capable of it, often to tell a story of any thing they know. Lacks.

HEREWITH. adv. [here and with.] With this.

You, fair fit, be not herewith dismayd.

But constant keep the way in which we stand. Spenser.

Herewith the castle of Hame was suddenly surpris'd by the Scots. Hayward.

HERIOT. n. f. [heriot, Saxon.] A fine paid to the lord at the death of a landholder, commonly the best thing in the landholder's possession. Hosker.

This he detains from the ivy; for he should be the true possessory lord thereof, but the olive dispendeth with his conscience to pass it over with a compliment and an heriot every year. Hosker.

Though thou consume but to renew,

Yet love, as lord, doth claim a heriot due. Cleaveland.

I took him up, as your heriot, with intention to have made the best of him, and then have brought the whole produce of him in a puse to you. Dryden.

HERITABLE. adj. [heres, Latin.] Whatever may be inherited.

By the canon law this son shall be legitimate and heritable, according to the laws of England. Hale.

1. Inheritance; estate devolved by succession; estate in general.

Let us our father's heritage divide. Spenser.

He considers that his proper home and heritage is in another world, and therefore regards the events of this with the indifference of a guest that tarries but a day. Rogers.

2. [In divinity.] The people of God.

O Lord, save thy people, and bless thine heritage. Com. Pr.

HERMAPHRODITE. n. f. [hermaprodite, French; from ἑρμᾶς

and ἄφροδιτης.] An animal uniting two sexes.

Man and wife make but one right

Canonical hermaprodite. Cleaveland.

Monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness hermaprodites. Arbutnot and Pope.

HERMAPHRODITICAL. adj. [from hermaprodite.] Partaking of both sexes.

There may be equivocal seeds, and hermaproditical principles, that contain the radicality and power of different forms.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HERMETICAL. adj. [from Hermet, or Hermetus, the son of

HERMETICK. adj. [from Hermet, or Hermetus, the son of French.] Chymical.

An hermetical seal, or to seal any thing hermetically, is to heat the neck of a glass 'till it is just ready to melt, and then with a pair of hot pincers to twist it close together. Boyle.

The tube was closed at one end with dischydration, and an hermetical seal. Boyle.

HERMETICALLY. adv. [from hermetical.] According to the hermetical or chymical art.

He suffered those things to putrefy in hermetically sealed glass, and vessels close covered with paper; and next to this but in vessels covered with fine lawn, so as to admit the air and keep out the insects: no living thing was ever produced there. Boyle.

HERMIT. n. f. [hermite, French; contracted from heremita, ignivivus.] 1. A solitary; an anchorite; one who retires from society to contemplation and devotion.

A wither'd hermit, five-score Winters worn,

Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shakespeare.

You were pleased to lay this command upon me, to give you my poor advice for your carriage in so eminent a place:

I humbly return you mine opinion, such as an hermit would than a courtier can render. Boyle.

He had been duke of Savoy, and, after a very glorious reign, took on him the habit of a hermit, and retired into the solitary spot. Boyle.

Come, inspiration, from thy hermit cell,

By mortals seldom found. Shakespeare.

2. A beadman; one bound to pray for another. Boyle.

For those of old,

And the late dignities heap'd up to them,

We rest your hermit. Shakespeare.

HERMITAGE. n. f. [hermitage, French.] The residence of a hermit.

By that painful way they pass

Forth to an hill, that was both steep and high;

On top whereof a sacred chapel was,

And eke a little hermitage thereby. Boyle.

Go with speed

To some forlorn and naked hermitage,

Remote from all the pleasures of the world. Boyle.

And may at last my weary age

Find out the peaceful hermitage,

The hairy gown and mossy cell,

Where I may fit and rightly dwell

Of every star that heav'n doth show,

And ev'ry herb that feeds the dew. Boyle.

About two leagues from Fribourg we went to the hermitage:

it lies in the prettiest solitude imaginable, among woods and rocks. Boyle.

HERMITESS. n. f. [from hermit.] A woman retired to solitude.

HERMITICAL. adj. [from hermit.] Suitable to a hermit.

HERMODACTYL. n. f. [hermodactyl, and ἡρμόδακτυλος.]

Hermodactyl is a root of a determinate and regular figure, and represents the common figure of a heart cut in twain, half an inch to an inch in length. This drug was first brought into medicinal use by the Arabians, and comes from Egypt and Syria, where the people use them, while fresh in water or purge; and have a way of roasting them for food, with they eat in order to make themselves fat. The doctors which we have, are a gentle purge; but they are not well used. Hill.

HERN. n. f. [Contracted from Herons, which see.]

Birds that are most easy to be drawn are the herons, herons, and bittern.

HERNHILL. n. f. [hern and hill.] An herb.

HERNIA. n. f. [Latin.] Any kind of rupture, denoted by the name of the part affected. Boyle.

A hernia would certainly succeed,

HERO. n. f. [heros, Latin; ἥρως.] 1. A man eminent for bravery.

In which were held, by sad decease,

Heracles and heracles. Cleaveland.

I sing of heros and of kings,

In mighty numbers mighty things.

Heracles in animated marble shown.

In this view he ceases to be an heros, and his name is no longer a virtue. Boyle.

These are thy honours, not that here thy bull

Is mix'd with heros, or with kings thy dull. Boyle.

Heracles, kings, Boyle.

Joy thy wish'd approach to see.

2. A man of the highest class in any respect.

HEROESS. n. f. [from heros; herois, Latin.] A herois; a male heros.

In which were held, by sad decease,

Heracles and heracles. Cleaveland.

Heracles and heracles. Hill.

HEROICAL. adj. [from heros.] Befitting an hero; heroic.

Mulidorus was famous over all Asia for his heroical enterprises. Sidney.

Though you have courage in an heroical degree, I ascribe it to you as your second attribute. Dryden.

HEROICALLY. adv. [from heroical.] After the way of a hero; suitably to an hero.

Not heroically in killing his tyrannical cousin. Sidney.

Free from all meaning, whether good or bad;

And, in one word, heroically mad. Dryden.

HEROICK. adj. [from heros; heroique, French.]

1. Productive of heroes.

Bolingbroke

From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,

Bring but the fourth of that heroick line. Shakespeare.

2. Noble; suitable to an hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.

Not that which justly gives heroick name

To person, or to poem. Milten.

Verbe makes heroick virtue live,

But you can life to verbes give. Waller.

3. Reciting the acts of heroes.

Methinks heroick poetry, 'till now,

Like some fantastick fairy land did show. Cowley.

I have chosen the most heroick subject which any poet could desire: I have taken upon me to describe the motives, the beginning, progress and success of a most just and necessary war. Dryden.

An heroick poem is the greatest which the soul of man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example. Dryden.

HEROICKLY. adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to an hero. He- roically is more frequent, and more analogical.

Samson hath quit himself

Like Samson, and heroickly hath finish'd

A life heroic. Milten.

HEROINE. n. f. [from heros; heroine, French.] A female hero. Anciently, according to English analogy, heresi.

But inborn worth, that fortune can controul,

New-strung, and stiffer bent her softer soul;

The heroine allum'd the woman's place,

Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.

Then shall the British stage

More noble characters expose to view,

And draw her finish'd herosines from you. Adisson.

HEROISM. n. f. [heroisme, French.] The qualities or character of an hero.

If the Odyssey be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality. Broomer.

HERON. n. f. [heron, French.]

1. A bird that feeds upon fish.

So lords, with sport of flag and heron full,

Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull. Sidney.

The heron, when the soareth high, freshwinds. Bacon.

2. It is now commonly pronounced hera.

The tow'ring hawk like future poets fang,

Who terror bears upon his foaming wing;

Let them on high the frighted hera harvey,

And lofty numbers paint their airy fray. Gay.

HERONRY. } n. f. [from heron; commonly pronounced

HERONSHAW. } herony.] A place where herons breed.

They carry their load to a large herony above three miles.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

HERPES. n. f. [herpes.] A cutaneous inflammation of two kinds: miliaris, or pustularis, which is like millet-seed upon the skin; and exedens, which is more corrosive and penetrating, so as to form little ulcers, if not timely taken care of. Quincy.

A farther progress towards acrimony maketh a herpes; and,

If the access of acrimony be very great, it maketh an herpes exedens. Wijeman.

HERRING. n. f. [hereng, French; herring, Saxon.] A small sea-fish.

The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pilchard, hering, mackerel, and cod. Carew.

Buy my hering fresh. Swift.

HERS. pron. The female possessive used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, this is hers house, this house is

2. The carriage in which corpses are drawn to the grave.

When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis' herse,

Who does not weep that reads the moving verse? Rassamun.

Crowds of dead in decent pomp are born;

Their friends attend the herse, the next relations mourn. Dryden's Virgil.

On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,

And frequent herse shall besiege your gates. Pope.

TO HERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a herse.

I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear. O, would she were herse'd at my foot, and the ducati in her coffin. Shakespeare.

The Grecians spitefully drew from the darts the corse,

And herse'd it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman.

The house is herse'd about with a black wood,

Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree:

Each flower's a pregnant poison, try'd and good;

Each herb a plague. Croftaco.

HERSELF. pronoun. The female personal pronoun, in the oblique cases reciprocal.

The jealous o'er-worn widow and herself,

Since that our brother dubb'd them gentewomen,

Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shakespeare.

The more the looks, the more her fears increase.

At nearer sight; and she's herself the less. Dryden.

HERSELIKE. adj. [herse and like.] Funeral; suitable to funerals.

Even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many herselike airs as carols. Bacon.

TO HERSE. v. a. [German, Saxon, to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow; to regard as holy. Now no longer in use.

Thenot, how nist the time of merry make,

Nor Pan to herse, nor with love to play;

Like mirth in May is meetest for to make,

Or Summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser.

Thenceforth it firmly was established,

And for Apollo's honour highly herse'd. Spenser.

But were thy years green as now be mine,

Then wouldst thou learn to carol of love,

And herse with hymns thy lady's gloire. Spenser.

HE'SITANCY. n. f. [from hesitate.] Dubiousness; uncertainty; hesitation.

The reason of my hesitancy about the air is, that I forgot to try whether that liquor, which shot into crystals expol'd to the air, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopped. Boyle.

Some of them reasoned without doubt or hesitancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to show that they believed their own reasonings. Atterbury.

TO HESITATE. v. a. [hesitare, Latin; hesiter, French.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty.

A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Grecians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Broomer.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,

Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;

Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,

A timorous foe, and a suspicious friend. Pope.

HE'SITATION. n. f. [from hesitate.]

1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made.

I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitations of every one:

they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each peruser. Woodward.

2. Intermision of speech; want of volubility.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Swift.

HEST. n. f. [German, Saxon.] Command; precept; injunction.

If thou be the most kind preterver

Of living wights, the sovereign lord of all,

How falls it then, that, with thy furious fervour,

Thou dost afflict the not deservet,

As him that doth thy lovely hest despise. Spenser.

Thou wast a spirit too delicate

To act her earthy and abhor'd commands,

Refusing her grand hest. Shakespeare.

HETEROCLITE. n. f. [heteroclitus, Fr. heteroclitum, Latin;

ετεροκλιτης and κλιτης.]

1. Such nouns as vary from the common forms of declension, by any redundancy, defect, or otherwise. Clarke.

The heteroclitic nouns of the Latin should not be touched in the first learning of the rudiments of the tongue. Watts.

2. Anything or person deviating from the common rule.

HETEROCLITICAL. adj. [from heteroclitic.] Deviating from the common rule.

Of sins heteroclitical, and such as want either name or pre-fixent, there is oft times a sin, even in their histories. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HETERODOX. adj. [heterodoxos, French; ετεροδοξος and δοξος.]

Deviating from the established opinion; not orthodox.

Partiality may be observed in some to vulgar, in others to heterodox tenets. Luce.

HETERODOX. n. f. An opinion peculiar.

Not only a simple heterodox, but a very hard paradox it will seem, and of great absurdity, if we say attraction is unjustly appropriated unto the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HETEROGENEAL. adj. [heterogene, French; heteros and gēnes.] Not of the same nature; not kindred.

Let the body adjacent and ambient be not commaterial, but merely heterogeneous towards the body that is to be preserved: such are quicksilver and white amber to herbs and flies. Bacon.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar. Newton.

HETEROGENEITY. n. f. [heterogeneit, Fr. from heterogeneous.]

1. Opposite of nature; contrariety or dissimilitude of qualities.
2. Opposite or dissimilar part.

Guaiacum, burnt with an open fire in a chimney, is sequestered into ashes and foot; whereas the same wood, distilled in a retort, does yield far other heterogeneities, and is resolved into oil, spirit, vinegar, water and charcoal. Boyle.

HETEROGENEOUS. adj. [heteros and gēnos.] Not kindred; opposite or dissimilar in nature.

I have with great care observed the condition of such heterogeneous bodies, which I found immerged and included in the mafs of this sandstone. Woodward.

HETEROGENEITY. n. f. [heteros and gēnos.] Those whose shadows fall only one way, as the shadows of us who live north of the Tropic fall at noon always to the North.

HEW. v. a. part. hewn or hewed. [heapan, Saxon; hauwen, Dutch.]

1. To cut with an edged instrument; to hack.
Upon the joint the lucky steel did light,
And made such way that hew'd it quite in twain. Spenser.

I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose my harm for't. Shakespeare.

He was hewn in pieces by Hamilton's friends. Hayward.

One Vane was so grievously hewn, that many thousands have died of less than half his hurts, whereof he was cured. Hayes.

2. To chop; to cut.
Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great:
Oh! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint. Shakespeare.

He from deep wells with engines water drew,
And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew. Dryden.

3. To fell, as with an ax.
He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakespeare.

Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
Which, by the heav'n's assistance and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night. Shakespeare.

Yet shall the axe of justice betwix him down,
And level with the root his lofty crown. Sandys.

He from the mountain bearing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk. Milton.

We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
And hew down all that would oppose our passage. Addison.

4. To form or shape with an axe.
Thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that hewed him out a sepulchre on high. Isaiah.

Nor is it so proper to hew out religious reformations by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations. King Charles.

This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems hewn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rocks. Addison.

Next unto bricks are preferred the square hewn stone. Mart.

5. To form laboriously.
The gate was adamant; eternal frame!
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god. Dryden.

I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, rather polishing old works than hewing out new. Pope.

HEWER. n. f. [from hew.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.

At the building of Solomon's temple there were fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HEXAGON. n. f. [hexagone, French; hex and gonia.] A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honeycombs are of that form.

HEXAGONAL. adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six-cornered. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and ballad diamonds into hexagonal. Ray on the Creation.

HEXAGONY. n. f. [from hexagon.] A figure of six angles.

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonity, or hexangular cellars of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians? Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HEXAMETER. n. f. [hex and metron.] A verse of six feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English hexameter. Dryden.

HEXANGULAR. adj. [hex and angulus, Latin.] Having six corners.

Hexangular sprigs or shoots of crystal, of various sizes, some clear, and others a little foiled. Woodward.

HEXAPOD. n. f. [hex and podis.] An animal with six feet.

I take thofe to have been the hexapods, from which the greater sort of beetles come; for that sort of hexapods are scarce in America. Ray on the Creation.

HEXASTICK. n. f. [hex and stix.] A poem of six lines.

HEY. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or acclamatory exhortation; the contrary to the Latin hei.

Shadwell from the town retires,
To bless the wood with peaceful lyric;
Then hey for praise and panegyric. Pope.

HEYDAY. interj. [for high day.] An expression of exultation, and sometimes of wonder.

Thou'lt say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend'st hey hey wit in praising him. Shakespeare.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady,
Not love, if any lov'd her, heyday! Shakespeare.

HEYDAY. n. f. A frolic; wildness.

At your age
The heyday in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgment. Shakespeare.

HEYDEGIVES. n. f. A wild frolic dance.

But friendly fairies met with many graces,
And light-foot nymphs can chase the long way right
With heyde gives, and trimly trodden traces. Spenser.

HIA TION. n. f. [from hie, Latin.] The act of yawning.

Men observing the continual hiation, or hailing open mouth, conceive the intention thereof to remove the excess of air; but this is also occasioned by the greatness of the lungs. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HIA'TUS. n. f. [hiatus, Latin.]

1. An aperture; a breach.
Those hiatus's are at the bottom of the let, whereby the abyss below open into and communicates with the world.

2. The opening of the mouth by the succession of hiatus a final vowel.

The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, unless where the cutting it off is more prejudicial to the sound than the hiatus itself. P. J.

HIBERNAL. adj. [hibernus, Latin.] Belonging to the winter.

This star should rather manifest its warming power in the winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in a hibernal conjunction. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HICCIUS DOCCIUS. n. f. [corrupted, I fancy, from hic deus, this or here is the learned man. Used by children of themselves.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.

An old dull sot, who told the clock
For many years at Bridewell dock,
At Westminster and Hicks's hall,
And hiccius doccius play'd in all;
Where, in all governments and times,
H' had been both friend and foe to crimes. Belton.

HICCOUGH. n. f. [hicken, Danish.] A convulsion of the stomach producing fobs.

So by an abbey's skeleton of late
I heard an echo supererogate
Through imperfection, and the voice refigure,
As if he had the hiccough o'er and o'er. Cassiodorus.

Sneezing cures the hiccough, and is profitable non modo in hard labour. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If the stomach be hurt, singulus or hiccough follows, with vomiting and nausea. Belton.

Hi'CCOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.] To fob with convulsion of the stomach.

Hi'CKUP. v. n. [corrupted from hiccough.] To fob with convulsed stomach.

Quoth he, to bid me not to love,
Is to forbid my pulse to move,
My beard to grow, my ears to prick up,
Or, when I'm in a fit, to hiccup. Belton.

Hi'CKWALL. } n. f. A bird. As with

Hi'CKWAY. }

Hi'DDEN. } part. pass. of hide.

'Thus fame shall be archiver's, renowned on earth;
And what most merits fame, in silence hid. Milton.

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night;
God said, let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

Hi'DE. v. a. preter. hid; part. pass. hid or hidden. [hid, Saxon.] To conceal; to withhold or withdraw from sight or knowledge.

Avastur, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee. Shakespeare.

Avastur, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee. Shakespeare.

Avastur, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee. Shakespeare.

Avastur, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee. Shakespeare.

Avastur, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee. Shakespeare.

Avastur, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee. Shakespeare.

Avastur, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee. Shakespeare.

Avastur, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee. Shakespeare.

Avastur, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee. Shakespeare.

Avastur, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee. Shakespeare.

Avastur, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee. Shakespeare.

Avastur, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee. Shakespeare.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakespeare.

Nile hears him knocking at his sev'nfold gates,
And focks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews fates. Dr.

Thus the fire of gods and men below:
What I have hidden, hope not thou to know. Dryden.

The sev'n part lays hidden in the piece;
Th' occasion but exerted that, or this. Dryden.

Then for my corps a homely grave provide;
Which love and me from publick scorn may hide. Dryden.

Seas bid with navies, chariots passing o'er
The channel, on a bridge from fluff to shore. Dryden.

With what astonishment and veneration may we look into our own souls, where there are such hidden stores of virtue and knowledge, such inexhausted sources of perfection. Addison.

The crafty being makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles, and hides himself under a greater variety of shapes. Addison.

Hell trembles at the sight, and hides its head
In utmost darkness, while on earth each heart
Is filled with peace. Rowe.

*HI*DE. v. n. To lye hid; to be concealed.
A fox, that had been hard run, begged of a countryman, at work in a wood, to help him to some hiding place. L'ftrange.

Our boldest talents in full view display'd;
Your virtues open firefront in the shade:

Bred to disguise, in publick 'tis you hide,
Where none distinguish 'twixt your shame and pride,

Weakness or decay. Pope.

HIDE and SEEK. n. f. A play in which some hide themselves, and another seeks them.

The boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide and seek in my hair. Swift.

HIDE. n. f. [hiden, Saxon; haude, Dutch.]
1. The skin of any animal, either raw or dressed.

The trembling weapon pass
Through nine bull hides, each under other plac'd
On his broad shield. Dryden.

Pisistratus was fust to grasp their hands,
And sowed fast hides upon the yellow sands. Pope.

2. The human skin: in contempt.
Oh, tyger's heart, wrapt in a woman's hide!

How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child? Shak.

His mantle, now his hide, with rugged hairs
Cleaves to his back; a famish'd face he bears. Dryden.

3. A certain quantity of land. [Hide, hyde, French; bida, barbarous Latin, as much as one plough can till.] Answer to the

One of the first things was the perfecting of the Winchellier book, being a more particular inquisition than had been before of every hide of land within the precincts of his conquest, and how they were holden. Watson.

HIDEBOUND. adj. [hide and bound.]
1. A horse is said to be hidebound when his skin sticks so hard to his ribs and back, that you cannot with your hand pull up or loosen the one from the other. It sometimes comes by poverty and bad keeping; at other times from over-riding, or a surfeit. Farrier's Dict.

2. [In trees.] Being in the state in which the bark will not give way to the growth.

A root of a tree may be hidebound, but it will not keep open without somewhat put into it. Bacon.

Like flinted hidebound trees, that just have got Sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Swift.

3. Harsh; untractable.
And still the harsher and hidebound,

The damfels prove, become the fonder. Hudibras.

4. Niggardly; penurious; parsimonious.
ANSWER TO THE

*HI*DEOUS. adj. [hideus, French.] Horrible; dreadful; shocking.

If he could have turned himself to as many forms as Proteus, every form should have been made hideous. Stdney.

Thou echo'st me,
As if there were some monster in thy thoughts,
Too hideous to be flown. Shakespeare.

I fled and cry'd out death!
Hell trembled at the hideous name, and fish'd
From all her caves, and back rebounded death. Milton.

Her eyes grow stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn;
Her hideous looks and hellish fumes return;

Her curling snakes with hissings fill the place,
And open all the furies of her face. Dryden.

'Tis forced through the hiatus's at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea i to the most horrible disorder, making it rage and roar with a most hideous and amazing noise. Woodward.

*HI*DEOUSLY. adv. [from hideous.] Horribly; dreadfully; in a manner that shocks.

I arm myself
To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously on me,
'Than I have drawn it in my canvas. Shakespeare.

Nº LXIX

This, in the present application, is hideously profane; but the sense is intelligible. Collier's Defence.

*HI*DIOUSNESS. n. f. [from hideous.] Horribleness; dreadful-ness; terror.

*HI*DEN. n. f. [from the verb.] He that hides.

*HI*E. v. n. [hiesan, Saxon.]
1. To hasten; to go in haste.

When they had mark'd the changed skies,
They wist their hour was spent; then each to rest him hies. Spenser.

In a fair moon-shine night thither he hies to dig it up. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

My will is even this,
That presently you hie you home to bed. Shakespeare.

Well, I will hie,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Shakespeare.

Some to the thores do fly,
Some to the woods, or whither fear advis'd;
But running from, all to destruction hie. Daniel.

The snail no sooner hies,
But virtue heard it, and away the hy'd. Crofton.

Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,
Accurs'd, and in a curst hour, he hies. Milton.

Thus he advis'd me, on yon aged tree
Hang up thy lute, and hie thee to the sea. Waller.

The youth, returning to his mistress, hies. Dryden.

2. It was anciently used with the reciprocal pronoun. It is now almost obsolete in all its uses.

Aufter hy'd him;
Cruel Aufter thither hy'd him. Crofton.

*HI*ERARCH. n. f. [hierarch and arx; hierarchus, Fr.] The chief of a sacred order.

Angels by imperial summons call'd,
Forthwith from all the ends of heav'n appear'd,
Under their hierarchies in orders bright. Milton.

*HI*ERARCHICAL. adj. [hierarchique, French; from hierarch.]

Belonging to sacred or ecclesiastical government.

*HI*ERARCHY. n. f. [hierarchie, French; from hierarch.]

1. A sacred government; rank or subordination of holy beings.

Out of the hierarchie of angels shewn,
The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the rest. Fairfax.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnic blood
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Dante.

These the supreme king,
Exalted to such pow'r, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarch, the orders bright. Milton.

Jehova, from the summit of the sky,
Environ'd with his winged hierarch,
The world survey'd. Sandys.

The blessedlest of mortal wights, now questionless the highest faint in the celestial hierarch, began to be so importuned, that a great part of the divine liturgy was addressed solely to her. Hovell.

2. Ecclesiastical establishment.

The presbytery had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarch of England. Bacon.

While the old levitical hierarch continued, it was part of the ministerial office to slay the sacrifices. South.

Consider what I have written, from regard for the church established under the hierarch of bishops. Swift.

*HI*EROGLYPH. } n. f. [hieroglyph, French; iesop, sacred,
*HI*EROGLYPHICK. } and γλῶσσοι, to carve.]

1. An emblem; a figure by which a word was implied. Hieroglyphicks were used before the alphabet was invented.

This hieroglyphick of the Egyptians was erected for parental affection, manifested in the protection of her young ones, when her nest was set on fire. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A lamp among the Egyptians is the hieroglyphick of life.

Wilkins's Deduct.

The first writing they used was only the single pictures and gravings of the things they would represent, which way of expression was afterwards called hieroglyphick. Woodward.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd. Pope.

2. The art of writing in picture.

No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign those animals as patrons of punch. Swift.

*HI*EROGLYPHICAL. } adj. [hieroglyphique, French; from the
*HI*EROGLYPHICK. } noun.] Emblematical; expressive of some meaning beyond what immediately appears.

In this place stands a stately hieroglyphical obelisk of Theban marble. Sandys.

Th' Egyptian serpent figures time,
And, stripp'd, returns into his prime;
If my affection thou would'st win,
First cast thy hieroglyphick skin. Cleveland.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and, by a process of tradition,

tion, stole into a total verity, which was but partly true in its morality.
HIEROGlyphically. adv. [from hieroglyphical.] Emblematically.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically, as the Egyptians, and the phoenix was the hieroglyphick of the sun.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HIEROPHANT. n. f. [hierō and φαντα.] One who teaches rules of religion; a priest.

Hecin the wantonness of poets, and the crafts of their heathenish priests and hieropiants, abundantly gratified the fancies of the people.
Hale.

TO HIGGLE. v. n. [of uncertain etymology; probably corrupted from haggle.]

1. To chaffer; to be penurious in a bargain.
 In good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly: it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged, to higgle and dodge in the amends.
Hale.

Bale thou art!
 To higgle thus for a few blows,
 To gain thy knight an op'nt spouse.
Hudibras.

Why all this higging with thy friend about such a paultry sum? Does this become the generosity of the noble and rich John Bull?
Arbutnot.

2. To go selling provisions from door to door. This seems the original meaning.

HIGGLEDY-PIGGLEDY. adv. A cant word, corrupted from higgle, which denotes any confused mass, as higglers carry a huddle of provisions together.

 And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.
Shak.
 Their ancles, or mountains, were far higher than those with us; whereby the remnants of the generation of men were, in such a particular deluge, saved.
Bacon.
 The higher parts of the earth being continually spending, and the lower continually gaining, they must of necessity at length come to an equality.
Burnet.

2. Elevated in place; raised aloft.
High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,
 That promises a fall, and shakes at ev'ry blast.
Dryden.
 Reason elevates our thoughts as high as the stars, and leads us through the vast species of this mighty fabric; yet it comes far short of the real extent of even corporeal being.
Lucke.

3. Exalted in nature.

4. Elevated in rank or condition: as, high priest.
 O mortals! blind in fate, who never know
 To bear high fortune, or endure the low.
Dryden.

Clarendon.

9. Severe; oppressive.
 When there appeareth on either side an high hand, violent profecution, cunning advantages taken, and combination, then is the virtue of a judge seen.
Bacon.

10. Noble; illustrious.
 Trust me, I am exceeding weary.

—Is it come to that? I had thought, weariness durst not have attacked so high blood.—It doth me, though it discolours the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it.
Shaksf.
 He wooeth both high and low, both rich and poor.
Shaksf.

11. Violent; tempestuous; loud. Applied to the wind.
 More ships in calms on a deceitful coast,
 Or unseem rocks, than in high storms are lost.
Denham.
 Spiders cannot easily weave their nets in a high wind.
Duppa's Rules for Devotion.

At length the winds are rais'd, the storm blows high;
 Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up
 In its full fury.
Addison.

12. tumultuous; turbulent; ungovernable.
 Not only tears

Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds worse within Began to rise; high passions, anger,
 Mistrust, suspicion, discord, hate, shook fore
 Their inward state of mind.
Milton.

Can heav'nly minds such high repentment show,
 Or exercise their spirit in human woe?
Dryden.

13. Full; complete.

High time now 'gan it was for Una fair,
 To think of those her captive parents dear.
 Sweet warrior, when shall I have peace with you?
Spenser.
High time it is this war now ended were.

 With adamantine columns threatens the sky.
Dryden.

HIGH is much used in composition with variety of meaning.

HIGH-BLEST. adj. Supremely happy.

The good which we enjoy from heav'n's deities;
 But that from us ought should ascend to heav'n's
 So prevalent, as to concern the mind
 Of God high-bless'd, or to incline his will,
 Hard to belief may seem.
Milton.

HIGH-BLOWN. Swelled much with wind; much inflated.

I have ventur'd,
 Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
 These many summers on a sea of glory;
 But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride
 At length broke under me, and now has left me
 Weary, and old with service, to the mory
 Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.
Shaksf.

HIGH-BORN. Of noble extraction.

Cast round your eyes
 Upon the high-born beauties of the court;
 There chuse some worthy partner of your heart.
Johnson.

HIGH-BUILT. adj.

Oil of turpentine, though clear as water, being digested upon the purely white sugar of lead, has in a short time afforded a high-red tincture. Boyle.
- HIGH SEASONED. Piquant to the palate.
Be sparing also of salt in the seasoning of all his victuals, and use him not to high-seasoned meats. Locke.
- HIGH-SIGHTED. Always looking upwards.
Let high-sighted tyranny range on,
'Till each man drop by lottery;
But if these countrymen bear fire enough,
What need we any t'pur but our own curse? Shakespeare.
- HIGH-SPIRITED. Bold; daring; insolent.
HIGH-STOMACHED. Obdurate; lofty.
High-stomach'd are they both, and full of ire;
In rage, deaf as the sea, hasty as fire. Shakespeare.
- HIGH-TASTED. Gustful; piquant.
Flatt'ry still in sugar'd words betrays,
And poison in high-tasted meats conveys. Denham.
- HIGH-VECED. Enormously wicked.
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-veced city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakespeare.
- HIGH-WOUGHT. Accurately finished; nobly laboured.
Thou triumph'st, victor of the high-wrought day,
And the pleas'd dame, soft smiling, lead'st away. Pope.
- HIGHLAND. n. f. [high and land.] Mountainous region.
Ladies in the highlands of Scotland use this discipline to their children in the midst of winter, and find that cold water does them no harm. Locke.
- The wood'n'g beech
Beholds her brother's steeds moon her own;
The highlands smok'd, cleft by the piercing rays. Addison.
- HIGHLANDER. n. f. [from highland.] An inhabitant of mountains. Addison.
- His cabinet council of highlanders. Addison.
- HIGHLY. adv. [from high.]
1. With elevation as to place and situation.
2. In a great degree.
Whatever expedients can allay those heats, which break us into different fashions, cannot but be useful to the publick, and highly tend to its safety. Addison.
- It cannot but be highly requisite for us to support and enliven our faith, by dwelling often on the same considerations. Asterbury.
3. Proudly; arrogantly; ambitiously.
What thou wouldst highly,
That thou wouldst holily; wouldst not play false,
And yet wouldst wrongfully win. Shakespeare.
4. With esteem; with estimation.
Every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think. Romans.
- HIGHMOST. adj. [An irregular word.] Highest; topmost.
Now is the fun upon the highmost hill
Of this day's journey; and from nine 'till twelve
Is three long hours. Shakespeare.
- HIGHNESS. n. f. [from high.]
1. Elevation above the surface.
2. The title of princes, anciently of kings.
Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than that your highness offer'd. Shakespeare.
- How long in vain had nature striv'd to frame
A perfect prince, ere her highness came? Waller.
- Beauty and greatness are eminently joined in your royal highness. Dryden.
3. Dignity of nature; supremacy.
Detraction from God was a terror to me, and by reason of his highness I could not endure. Job.
- HIGHT. (This is an imperfect verb, used only in the preterite
6
- tense with a passive signification: petan, to call, Saxon; bessen, to be called, German.)
1. Was named; was called.
The city of the great king hight it well,
Wherewith eternal peace and happiness doth dwell. Spenser.
- Within this homestead liv'd, without a peer
For crowing lood, the noble Chanticleer,
So hight her cock. Dryden.
2. It is sometimes used as a participle passive, and signifies called;
named. It is now obsolete, except in burlesque writings.
Amongst the reft a good old woman was,
Hight mother Hubbard. Spenser.
- HIGHWATER. n. f. [high and water.] The utmost flow of the tide.
They have a good way in Essex of draining of lands that lie below the high-water, and that are something above the low-water mark. Morimer.
- HIGHWAY. n. f. [high and way.] Great road; publick path.
So few there be
That chuse the narrow path, or seek the right:
All keep the broad highway, and take delight
With many rather to go astray. Spenser.
- Two inscriptions give a great light to the histories of Appian, who made the highway, and of Fabius the dictator. Addison.
- Ent'ring on a broad highway,
Where power and titles scatter'd lay,
He strove to pick up all he found. Swift.
- I could mention more trades we have lost, and are in the highway to lose. Child.
- HIGHWAYMAN. n. f. [highway and man.] A robber that plun-ders on the publick roads.
'Tis like the friendship of pickpockets and highwaymen, that observe strict justice among themselves. Bentley.
- A remedy like that of giving my money to an high- wayman before he attempts to take it by force, to prevent the sin of robbery. Swift.
- HIGHGLASS. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
- HILARITY. n. f. [hilaritas, Latin.] Merriment; gaiety.
Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incense from wine. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- HILB, in Ælric's grammar, is interpreted a lord or lady; so Hildebert is a noble lord; Matilda, an heroic lady; and in the same sense is Wig also found. Gibson.
- HILDBING. n. f. [hild, Saxon, signifies a lord; perhaps hilding means originally a little lord in contempt, for a man that has only the delicacy or bad qualities of high rank; or a term of reproach abbreviated from hildering, degenerate. Hugh's Speng.]
1. A forty, paltry, cowardly fellow.
He was some hilding fellow, that had stol'n
The horse he rode on.
If your lordship find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect. Shakespeare.
- Your are cubb'd from that enlargement by
The consequence o' th' crown, and must not foil
The precious note of it with a base slave,
A hilding for a liverly, a squire's cloth. Shakespeare.
- This idle toy, this hilding scorns my power,
And sets us all at naught. Retius.
2. It is used likewise for a mean woman.
Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench;
Helen and Hero, hildings and harlots. Shakespeare.
- HILL. n. f. [hil, Saxon.] An elevation of ground less than a mountain.
My sheep are thoughts, which I both guide and serve;
Their pasture is fair hills of fruitless love. Sidney.
- Jerusalem is seated on two hills,
Of height unlike, and turned side to side. Fairfax.
- Three fides are sure imbar'd with crags and hills,
The rest is easy, scant to rile epy'd;
But mighty bulwarks fence the plainer part:
So art helps nature, nature strengtheneth art. Fairfax.
- When our eye some prospect would pursue,
Descending from a hill, looks round to view. Grenville.
- A hill is nothing but the nest of some metal or mineral, which, by a plactick virtue and the efficacy of subterranean fires, converting the adjacent earths into their substance, do increase and grow. Clyne.
- HILLOCK. n. f. [from hill.] A little hill.
Yet weigh this, alas! great is not great to the greater:
What, judge you, doth a hillock throw by the lofty Olympus! Sidney.
- Sometime walking not unseen
By hedge-row clens, on hillocks green. Milton.
- This mountain, and a few neighbouring hillocks that lie scattered about the bottom of it, is the whole circuit of these dominions. Addison.
- HILLY. adj. [from hill.] Full of hills; unequal in the surface.
Towards the hilly corners of Drunna remain yet her very Aborigenes, fatally thrust amongst an assembly of mountains, Howl,
Climbing

Climbing to a hilly steep,
He views his herds in vales afar.

Dryden.

Lo! how the Norick plains

Rise hilly, with large piles of slaughtered knights. Philips.
Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, tho'
a man would chuse to travel through a plain one. Adelphi.

HILT. n. f. [Hilt, Saxon, from heilan, to hold.] The handle of any thing, particularly of a sword.

Now sits expectation in the air,

And hides a sword from hilt unto the point,
With crowns imperial; & crowns and coronets,
Promis'd to Harry and his followers. Shakespeare.

Take thou the hilt,

And when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword. Shakespeare.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brads displays

A ruddy gleam; & whose hilt, a silver blaze. Pope.

HIM. [him, Saxon.]

1. The oblique case of he.

Me he reftored unto my office, and him he hanged. Genfii.

2. Him was anciently used for it in a neutral sense.

HIMSELF. pron. him and self.]

1. In the nominative the same as he, only more emphatical.

It was a sparing speech of the ancients to say, that a friend is another himself; for that a friend is far more than him- self. Bacon.

With shame remembers, while himself was one

Of the same herd, himself the same had done. Denham.

2. In ancient authors it is used neutrally for itself.

She is cover'd

Above the clouds as high as heav'n himself. Shakespeare.

3. In the oblique cases it has a reciprocal signification.

I perceive it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set awork by a reprovable badness in himself. Shakespeare.

4. It is sometimes not reciprocal.

Nothing in nature can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy. South.

HIN. n. f. [hin, Saxon.] A measure of liquids among Jews, containing about ten pints.

With the one lamb a tenth deal of flour, mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil. Exodus.

HIND. adj. compar. hinder; superl. hindmost. [hyn, Saxon.]

Backward; contrary in position to the face: as, hind legs. See HINDER and HINDEST.

Bringing its tail to its head, it bends its back so far 'till its head comes to touch its hind part, and so with its armour gathers itself into a ball. Roy.

The flag

Hears his own feet, and thinks they found like more,
And fears his hind legs will o'erake his fore. Pope.

HIND. n. f. [hinde, Saxon; from hineus, Latin.]

1. The she to a stag; the female of a red deer.

How, he flew with glancing dart amidst,

A gentle hind, the which the lovely boy

Did love as life. Spenser.

Can't thou mark when the hinds do calve?

Nor Hercules more lands or labours knew,

Not though the brazen-footed hind he flew. Dryden.

2. [hine, Saxon.] A servant.

A couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds, were called forth by their mistress, to carry me in the name of foul cloaths to Datchet-lane. Shakespeare.

3. [hine, Saxon.] A peasant; a boor; a mean rustic.

To reap the harvest their ripe ears did yield,

Now like those, when rolling thunders roar,

And sheets of lightning blast the standing field. Dryden.

He cloath'd himself in coarse array,

A lab'ring hind in show. Dryden.

HINDERRIES. n. f. The same as raspberries. Amfworth.

To HINDER. v. a. [hine, Saxon.] To obstruct; to stop;

to let, to impede.

Hinder me not, seeing the Lord hath prospered my way.

Genfii.

The whole world shined with clear light, and none were hindered in their labour. Widdem.

You minims of hindring knot-grafs made;

You bead, you acorn.

Shakespeare.

If the alms were hindered only by intreaty, the hinderer is not tied to restitution, because intreaty took not liberty away from the giver. Taylor.

This objection hinders not but that the heroic action of some commander, enterprised for the Christian cause, and executed happily, may be written. Dryden.

What hinders younger brothers, being fathers of families, from having the same right? Locke.

HINDER. adj. [from hind.] That which is in a position contrary to that of the face.

These beasts, fighting with any man, stand upon their hind feet, and so this did, being ready to give me a fluted conbracement.

As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back.

HINDERANCE. n. f. [from hinder.] Impediment; let; hindrance.

Fallacious opinions, touching the will of God to bring things done, are wont to bring forth mighty and violent things against the hinderances of them, and those practices are extremely more pernicious than the first; yea, most extremely sometimes opposite to the first.

They must be in every Christian church the same, except mere impossibility of so having it be the hinderance. Hier.
What hinderance have they been to the knowledge of
is well done!

I have we not plighted each our holy oath,

One foul should both inspire, and neither prove

His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love? Dryden.

He must conquer all these difficulties, and remove all the hinderances out of the way that leads to justice. Arbuth.

HINDER. n. f. [from hinder.] He or that which hinders or obstructs.

Brakes, great hinderers of all plowing, grow

HINDERLING. n. f. [from hind or hinder.] A party, suc-cels, degenerate animal. Mo.

HINDERMOST. adj. [This word seems to be less proper than hindmost.] Hindmost; last; in the rear.

He put the handmaids and their children foremost; and last and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindmost. Gen.

Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by,

And leave you hindmost. Shakespeare.

HINDMOST. adj. [hind and most.] The last; the end; that which comes in the rear.

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,

Whatever occasion keeps him from us now. Shakespeare.

He met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind. Isaiah.

Let him retire, betwixt two aged call,

The first of this, and hindmost of the last,

A losing gambler. Dryden.

The race by vigour, not by vaunts is won;

So take the hindmost, hell—he said, and run, Pope.

HINGE. n. f. [or hingle, from hingle or hunge.]

1. Joints upon which a gate or door turns.

At the gate

Of heav'n arriv'd, the gate self-open'd wide,

On golden hinges turning. Milton.

Then from the hinge their strokes the gates drove,

And where the way they cannot find, they force. Dryden.

Heav'n's imperious queen (that down from high)

At her approach the brazen hinges fly,

The gates are forc'd. Dryden.

2. The cardinal points of the world, east, west, north, and south.

If when the moon is in the hinge at rest,

The birth breaks forward from its native bed;

Full eighty years, if you two years abate,

This station gives. Cock.

And these being hinges of the world, create

New powers in stars. Cock.

3. A governing rule or principle.

The other hinge of punishment might turn upon a law, whereby all men, who did not marry by the age of six and twenty, should pay the third part of their revenue. Feck.

4. To be off the HINGES. To be in a state of irregularity and disorder.

The man's spirit is out of order and off the hinges and

'till that be put into its right frame, he will be perpetually disquieted. Locke.

To HINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with hinges.

2. To bend as a hinge.

He threw a flatterer now, and hinge thy knee;

And let his very breath whom thou'lt observe,

Blow off thy cap. Shakespeare.

To HINT. v. a. [enter, French. Stinner.] To bring to mind by a slight mention or remote allusion; to mention imperfectly.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,

Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike. Pope.

In waking whippers, and repeated dreams,

To hint pure thought, and warn the favour'd soul. Temple.

To HINT. v. a. To allude to; to touch the holy upon.

Speaking of Augustus's actions, he still remembers the whole culture ought to be some way hinted at throughout the whole poem. Locke.

HINT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Faint notice given to the mind; remote allusion; distant circumstances. Locke.

5

Let him strictly observe the first flirrings and intimations, the first hints and whispers of good and evil, that pass in his heart. South.

2. Suggestion; intimation.

On this hint I spake, Shakespeare.
She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd.
Actions are so full of circumstances, that, as men observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put different interpretations on them. Addison.

WIP. n. f. [pipe, Saxon.]

1. The joint of the thigh; the fleshy part of the thigh.

How now, which of your hips has the most profound sciatica. Shakespeare.

Hippocrates affirmeth of the Scythians, that, using continual riding, they were generally molested with the sciatica, or hip gout. Brewer's Vulgar Errors.

So shepherds use

To let the same mark on the hip

Both of their found and rotten sheep. Hudibras.

Against a stump his talk the monster grinds,
And ranch'd his hips with one continu'd wound. Dryden.

2. To have on the HIP. [A low phrase.] To have an advantage over another. It seems to be taken from hunting, the hip or hunch of a deer being the part commonly seized by the dogs.

If this poor brach of Venice, whom I cherish

For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,

I'll have our Michael Caffio on the hip. Shakespeare.

HIP. n. f. [from peepa, Saxon.] The fruit of the briar or the dogrose.

Eating hips and drinking watry foam. Spenser.

Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;

The oaks bear masts, the briars scarlet hips. Shakespeare.

Years of store of haws and hips do commonly portend cold winters. Bacon.

To HIP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sprain or shoot the hip.

His horse was hipp'd, with an old motly saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred. Shakespeare.

HIP-HOP. A cant word formed by the reduplication of hop.

Your different tastes divide our poets cares;

One foot the sock, t'other the bulkin wears;

Thus while he strives to please, he's forc'd to do't,

Like Volcicus hip-hop in a single boot. Congreve.

HIP. interj. An exclamation, or calling to one; the same as the Latin heu, heui!

HIP. adj. A corruption of hypochondriack. Ainsworth.

HIPPISH. adj. A corruption of hypochondriack. Ainsworth.

HIPPOCENTAUR. n. f. [ἵππος and κένταυρος, French.]

A fabulous monster, half horse and half man.

How are poetical fictions, how are hippocentaurs and chimæras to be imaged, which are things quite out of nature, and whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.

HIPPOCRAS. n. f. [ἵπποκράτης, French; quasi vinum Hippocratis.]

A medicated wine.

Sack and the well-spiced hippocras, the wine,

Wassail the bowl with ancient ribbands fine. King.

HIPPOCRATES'S Sleeve. n. f. A wollen bag made by joining the two opposite angles of a square piece of flannel, used to strain syrups and decoctions for clarification. Quincy.

HIPPOCRIF. n. f. [ἵππος and κρίψ, hippocriffe, French.]

A winged horse.

He caught him up, and without wing

Of hippocriff bore through the air sublime. Milton.

HIPPOTAMUS. n. f. [ἵππος and τάμας.] The river horse. An animal found in the Nile.

HIPPHOT. adj. [ἵππος and φύσις.] Sprained or dislocated in the hip.

Why do you go nodding and wagging so like a fool, as if you were hipphot? says the goole to the goolling. L'Estrange.

HIPWORT. n. f. [hip and wort.] A plant. Ainsworth.

TO HIRE. v. a. [byran, Saxon.]

1. To procure any thing for temporary use at a certain price.

His fordid avarice rakes

In excrements, and hires the jakes. Dryden.

2. To engage a man to temporary service for wages.

They weigh silver in the balance, and hire a goldsmith, and he maketh it a god. Isaiah.

I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms

Are hired to bear their slaves. Shakespeare.

3. To bribe.

Themetes first, 'tis doubtful whether hir'd,

Or so the Trojan destiny requir'd,

Mov'd that the ramparts might be broken down. Dryden.

4. To engage himself for pay.

They that were full, hired out themselves for bread; and they that were hungry, ceased. 1 Samuel.

HIRE. n. f. [byre, Saxon.]

1. Reward or recompence paid for the use of any thing.

Wages paid for service.

Great thanks and goodly meed to that good fire;

He thence departing gave for his pains hire. Spenser.

Nº LXIX.

I have five hundred crowns,
The thrifty hire I sav'd under your father.

Though little was their hire, and I got their gain. Shakespeare.

Yet somewhat to their share he threw. Dryden.

All arts and arts; Thebes could command,

Who sold for hire, or wrought for better fame. Dryden.

HIRELING. n. f. [from hire.]

1. One who serves for wages.

The hireling longs to see the shades ascend,

That with the tedious day his toil might end,

And he his pay receive. Sandys.

In the framing of Hiero's ship there were three hundred carpenters employed for a year, besides many other hirelings for carriages. Wilkins.

'Tis frequent here to see a freeborn son

On the left hand of a rich hireling run. Dryden.

2. A mercenary; a prostitute.

Now she shades thy evening walk with bays,

No hireling she, no prostitute to praise. Pope.

HIRELING. adj. Serving for hire; vernal; mercenary; doing what is done for money.

Then trumpets, torches, and a tedious crew

Of hireling mourners for his funeral due. Dryden.

HIRER. n. f. [from hire.]

1. One who uses any thing paying a recompence; one who employs others paying wages.

In Scotland it denotes one who keeps small flocks to let.

HIRUTE. adj. [hirsutus, Latin.] Rough; rugged.

There are bulbous, fibrous, and hirute roots: the hirute is a middle fort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that, besides the putting forth sap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round. Bacon.

HIS. pronoun possessive. [byr, Saxon.]

1. The masculine possessive. Belonging to him that was before mentioned.

England his approaches makes as fierce

As waters to the sucking of a gulph. Shakespeare.

If much you note him,

You shall offend him, and extend his passion. Shakespeare.

Heav'n and yourself

Had part in this fair maid; now heaven hath all,

All the better it is for the maid:

Your part in her you could not keep from death;

But heav'n keeps his part in eternal life. Shakespeare.

If our father carry authority with such disposition as he bears this last surrender of his, it will but offend us. Shakespeare.

He that is nourished by the acorns he picked up under an oak in the wood, has appropriated them to himself: nobody can deny but the nourishment is his. Locke.

When a ship, he offers at a kiss;

And when my arms I stretch, he stretches his. Addison.

2. It was anciently used in a neutral sense, where we now say its.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree

Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare.

Not the dreadful spout,

Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear

In his descent. Shakespeare.

There's not the smallest orb, which thou beholdest,

But in his motion like an angel rings,

Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubims. Shakespeare.

This rule is not so general, but that it admitteth his exceptions. Carver.

Opium loseth some of his poisonous quality, if it be vapoured out, mingled with spirit of wine. Bacon.

3. It is sometimes used as a sign of the genitive case: as, the man his ground, for the man's ground.

Where is this mankind now! who lives to age

Fit to be made Methusalem his page? Dante.

By thy fond comfort, by thy father's cares,

By young Telemachus his blooming years. Pope.

4. It is sometimes used in opposition to this man's.

Were I king,

I should cut off the nobles for their lands,

Desire his jewels, and this other's house. Shakespeare.

5. Anciently before sif.

Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him. Sims.

TO HISS. v. n. [hissen, Dutch.]] To utter a noise like that of a serpent and some other animals. It is remarkable, that this word cannot be pronounced without making the noise which it signifies.

In the height of this bath to be thrown into the Thames, and cool'd glowing hot, in that surge, like a horsehoe; I think of that; hissing hot. Shakespeare.

The merchants shall hiss at thee. Isaiah.

See the furies arise:

See the snakes that they rear,

How they hiss in their hair. Dryden.

Against the steed he threw

His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,

Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden.

To Hiss. v. a. [hyscean, Saxon.]

1. To condemn by hissing; to explode.

Every one will hiss him out to his disgrace.

Ecclii.

Men shall pursue with merited disgrace;

Hiss, clap their hands, and from his country chase. Sandys.

- She would so shamefully fail in the last act, that, instead of a plague, she would deserve to be hissed off the stage.

More.

I have seen many successions of men, who have shot themselves into the world, some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off, and quitting it with disgrace.

Dryden.

Will you venture your all upon a cause, which would be hissed out of all the courts as ridiculous?

Collier.

2. To procure hisses or disgrace.

Thy mother plays, and I

Play too; but so disgrace'd a part, whose issue

Will hiss me to my grave.

Shakespeare.

What's the newelf grief?

—That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker,

Each minute tears a new one.

Shakespeare.

Hiss. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a serpent, and of some other animals.

2. Censure; expression of contempt used in theatres.

He heard

On all sides, from innumerable tongues,

A dimmal universal hiss, the sound

Of public scorn!

Milton.

Fierce champion fortitude, that knows no fears

Of hisses, blows, or want, or loss of ears.

Pope.

Hiss. inter. [Of this word I know not the original: probably it may be a corruption of hush, hush it, hush, hiss.] An exclamation commanding silence.

Hiss! Romeo, hiss! O for a falconer's voice,

To lure this tallied gentle back again.

Shakespeare.

Mute silence hiss along!

'Tis Philomel will deign a song.

In her sweetest saddest plight,

Smoothing the rugged brow of night.

Milton.

Hiss, hiss, says another that stood by, away, doctor; for here's a whole pack of dimmals coming.

Swift.

HISTORIAN. n. f. [historian, Latin; historien, French.] A writer of facts and events; a writer of history.

What thanks sufficient, or what recompence

Faust, have I to render thee, divine

Historian!

Milton.

Our country, which has produced writers of the first figure in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good historians.

Addison.

Not added years on years my task would close,

The long historian of my country's woes.

Pope.

HISTORICAL. adj. [historique, Fr. historicus, Latin.]

1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these several knights adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer.

Spenser.

Here rising bold, the patriot's honest face;

There warriors frowning in historical traits.

Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to history or narrative.

In an historical relation we use terms that are most proper and best known.

Burnet.

With equal justice and historical care,

Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare. Prior.

HISTORICALLY. adv. [from historical.] In the manner of history; by way of narration.

The gospels, which are weekly read, do all historically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spoke, did, or suffered in his own person.

Hooker.

When that which the word of God doth but deliver historically, we construe as if it were legally meant, and so urge it further than he can prove it was intended, do we not add to the laws of God?

Hooker.

After his life has been rather invented than written, I shall consider him historically as an author, with regard to those works he has left behind him.

Pope.

To HISTORIFY. v. a. [from history.] To relate; to record in history.

O, muse, historify

Her praise, whose praise to learn your skill hath framed me.

The third age they term historicon; that is, such wherein matters have been more truly historified, and therefore may be believed.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HISTORIOGRAPHER. n. f. [historia and γραφω; historiographie, Fr.] An historian; a writer of history.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these knights several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer.

Spenser.

What poor ideas must strangers conceive of those persons who have been famous among us, should they form their notions of them from the writings of those our historiographers?

I put the journals of all transactions into a strong box, in the manner of the historiographers of some eastern monarchs.

HISTORIOGRAPHY. n. f. [ιστορια and γραφω.] The art or employment of an historian.

HISTORY. n. f. [ιστορια; historia, Latin; histoire, French.]

HISTORIONICALLY. adv. [from historionical.] Theatrical; in the manner of a buffoon.

To HIT. v. a. [from ictus, Latin, Misshen, from him, Dutch, to throw at random, Junius.]

1. To strike; to touch with a blow.

When I first law her I was presently stricken; well, like a foolish child, that when any thing hit him will that he had again upon it, would needs look again, as though I would persuade mine eyes that they were deceived.

His confidence shall hit him in the teeth, and all her sin and folly.

2. To touch the mark; to not miss.

Is he a god that ever flies the light?

Or naked he, disguis'd in all untruth?

If he be blind, how hit doth he fight?

So hard it is to tumble, and not to er, and to be so mark with a shaking hand.

3. To attain; to reach the point.

Were I but twenty-one,

Your father's image is to hit in you,

His very air, that I should call you brother,

As I did him.

- 3

- But thou bring'st valour too and wit,
Two things that seldom fall to hit. Hudibras
This may hit, 'tis more than barely possible; for friars have free admittance into every house. Dryden
All human race would vain be wits,
And millions miss for one that hits. Swift
4. To light on.
You've hit upon the very string, which touch'd,
Echoes the found, and jars within my soul;
There lies my grief. Dryden
It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing before that time: sure he was a fortunate man, who, after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to hit upon
it. Tillotson
There's a just medium betwixt eating too much and too little; and this dame had hit upon't, when the matter was so ordered that the hen brought her every day an egg. L'Estr.
None of them hit upon the art. Addison There's but a true and a false prediction in any telling of fortune; and a man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design. Bentley
HIT, v. f. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke.
The king hath hit, that in a dozen palfies between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits. Shakespeare
So he the fam'd Cilician fencer prais'd,
And at each hit with wonder fenc'd amaz'd. Dryden

2. A lucky chance.
Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit? Shak.
To suppose a watch, by the blind hits of chance, to perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity. Garnside
If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly kill, but chance; not a true judgment, but a lucky hit. Staub

But with more lucky hit than those
That use to make the flurs despise. Hudibras
The fisherman's waiting, and the lucky hit it had in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail. L'Estr.
These hits of words a true poet often finds, without seeking. Dryden

If casual concurrence did the world compose,
And things and hits fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring? Blackmore
If at first he minds his hits,

And drinks champagne among the wits,
Five deep he tolls the tow'ring lasses. Prior
To HITCH, v. n. [piegan, Saxon, or hecher, French. Skinner.]
To catch; to move by jerks. I know not where it is used but in the following passage.

Whoe'er offends, at some unlucky time
Slides in a verse, or hitches in a rhyme;
Saeed to ridicule his whole life long. Pope
And the fall brought of some merry song.

To HITCH, v. n. [See HATCH.] To beat or comb flax or hemp.

HITCHEL, n. f. [heckel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten or combed.

HITHE, n. f. [hise, Saxon.] A small haven to land wares out of vessels or boats: as Queenhithe, and Lambhithe, now Lambeth.

HITHER, adv. [hise, Saxon.]
1. To this place from some other.

Cæsar, tempted with the fame
Of this sweet island, never conquered,
And envying the Britons blazed name,
O hideous hunger of dominion, hither came. Spenser
Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither. Shakespeare

Who brought me hither.
Will bring me hence, no other guide I seek. Milton

2. It is used in opposition: hither and thither, to this place and that.

3. To this end; to this design; to this topick of argument:
[hæc, Latin. Hæc refer enim.]

Hereupon dependeth whatever difference there is between the flates of faults in glory: hither we refer whatsoever belongeth unto the highest perfection of man, by way of fer-veur towards God. Hooten

Hither belong all those texts, which require of us that we should not walk after the flesh, but after the spirit. Tillotson

HITHER, adj. superl. hithermost. Nearer; towards this part.
After this,

But on the hither tide, a different sort,
From the high neighbouring hills descended. Milton
An eternal duration may be shorter or longer upon the hither end thereof, namely, that extreme wherein it is finite.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

HITHERMOST, adj. [of hither, adv.] Nearest on this side.

That which is eternal cannot be extended to a greater extent at the hithermost and concluding extreme. Hale

HITHERTO, adv. [from hither.]

1. To this time; yet; in any time till now.
More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,
Here needs me, whies the famous ancestors
Of my most dreadful sovereign I recount. Spenser

Hitherto I have only told the reader what ought not to be the subject of a picture or of a poem. Dryden

2. At every time till now.
In this we are not their adversaries, tho' they in the other hitherto have been ours. Hunter

Hitherto, lords, what your commands impos'd
I have perform'd, as reason was, obeying. Milton

Hitherto she kept her love conceal'd,
And with those graces ev'ry day beheld
The graceful youth. Dryden

He could not have failed to add the opposition of ill spirits to the good: they have also their design ever opposite to that of heaven, and this alone has hitherto been the practice of the moderns. Dryden

We ought to struggle with those natural disadvantages, and be taught whom we employ, whenever we design to correct them, which is a work that has hitherto been assumed by the least qualified hands. Swift

HITHERWARD, adv. [hise, Saxon.] This way;
HITHERWARDS, adv. towards this place.

Some parcels of their power are forth already,
And only hitherward. Shakespeare

The king himself in person hath set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily. Shakespeare

With strong and mighty preparation.
A puffant and mighty pow'r
Of gallow-glaffer and stout kernes,
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shakespeare

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton

HIVE, n. f. [hise, Saxon.]
1. The habitation or cell of bees.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driv'n away. Shakespeare

So wand'ring bees would perish in the air,
Did not a found, proportion'd to their ear,
Appeal their rage, invite them to the hive. Waller

Bees, of which we are told so many wonderful things, have each of them a hole in their hive: their honey is their own, and every bee minds her own concerns. Addison

2. The bees inhabiting a hive.
The commons, like an angry hive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down. Shakespeare

3. A company being together.
What modern malans call a lodge was by antiquity called a hive of false malans; and therefore, when a diffention happens, the going off is to this day called swarming. Swift

To HIVE, v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To put into hives; to harbour.

Mr. Addison of Oxford has been troublesome to me: after his bees, my latter swarm is scarcely worth hiving. Dryden

When they are fully settled, and the cluster at the biggest, hive them. Mortimer

2. To contain in hives.
Ambitious now to take excise
Of a more fragrant paradise,
He at Fulkara's sieve arriv'd,
Where all delicious sweets are hiv'd. Chapman

To HIVE, v. n. To take shelter together.
He sleeps by day
More than the wild cat: drones hive not with me.
Therefore I part with him. Shakespeare

In Summer we wander in a paradisaical scene, among groves and gardens; but at this season we get into warmer houses, and hive together in cities. Pope

HIVE, n. f. [from hive.] One who puts bees in hives.
Let the hive drink a cup of good beer, and wash his hands and face therewith. Mortimer

 they understand Chaucer, would hoard him up as misers do their grandam gold, only to look on it themselves, and hinder others from making use of it. Dryden.
- You hoard not health for your own private use,
 But on the publick spend the rich produce. Dryden.
 The bafe wretch, who hoards up all he can,
 Is prais'd, and call'd a careful thriving man. Dryden.
 You will be unsuccessful, if you give out of a great man, who is remarkable for his frugality for the publick, that he squanders away the nation's money; but you may safely relate that he hoards it. Arbutnot.
- A superfluous abundance tempts us to forget God, when it is hoarded in our treasures, or considered as a safe, independent provision laid up for many years. Rogers.
- HOARDER. n. f.* [from hoard.] One that stores up in secret.
 Since commodities will be raised, this alteration will be an advantage to nobody but hoarders of money. Lalor.
- HOARBOUND. n. f.* [marrubium, Latin.] A plant.
 It is a verticillate plant with a lip flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip or crest is upright, with two horns; but the under lip or beard is divided into three parts: the point is fixed to the hinder part of the flower, and attended by four embryos, which become so many oblong seeds, inclosed in the flower-cup. Müller.
- Hoarbound* has its leaves and flower-cup covered very thick with a white hoariness: it is famous for the relief it gives in moist asthma, and in all diseases of the breast and lungs, of which a thick and viscous matter is the cause; but it is now little used. Hill.
- HOARINESS. n. f.* [from hoar.] The state of being whitish;
 the colour of old men's hair.

Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty hearted, whose low sound
Reverbs no hollowness. Shakespeare.
People, young and raw, and soft natured, think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of any man's; but when experience shall have shewn them the hardness of most hearts, the hollowness of others, and the baseness and ingratitude of almost all, they will then find that a friend is the gift of God, and that he only who made hearts can unite them. Smith.

HOLLOWROOT. n. f. [hollow and root.] A plant. Ainsworth.
HOLLY. n. f. [Dolein, Saxon.] A plant.
The leaves are set about the edges with long, sharp, stiff prickles: the berries are small, round, and generally of a red colour, containing four triangular striated seeds in each. Of this tree there are several species; some variegated in the leaves, some with yellow berries, and some with white. Milner.

And, wand'ring *home*wards, seek our safety back.

HOME. n. [home, French; home, Latin.]

1. Murder; manquelling.

The apostles command to abstain from blood: confer this according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that the law of only is forbidden; but confute it in reference to the law of Jews, about which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clean other sense, and a truth, when we expect it of eating, and not of shedding blood.

2. Detraction. In the following lines it is not proper.

What wonder is't that black detraction thrives!
The homicide of names is less than lives. Dryden.

3. [Homicide, Fr. homicide, Lat. A murderer; a man-slayer.
Your beauty, that did hunt me in my sleep,
To undertake the death of all the world,
So might I live one hour in your sweet bosom.

HONEY-BAG. n. f. [honey and bag.]

The honey-bag is the stomach, which they always fill to satisfy, and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter. Grev.

HONEY-COMB. n. f. [honey and comb.] The cells of wax in which the bee stores her honey.

All these a milk-white honey-comb furrow'd,
Which in the midst the country banquet crown'd. Dryden.

HONEY-COMBED. adj. [honey and comb.] Spoken of a piece of ordnance flawed with little cavities by being ill cast.

A mairner having discharged his gun, which was honey-combed, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Hijeman.

HONEY-DEW. n. f. [honey and dew.] Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds insects. Mortimer.

How honey-dews embalm the fragrant morn,

Garth.

HONEY-FLOWER. n. f. [melantous, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a shrub: the leaves are like those of burnet; the cup of the flower is divided into several parts: the flower consists of four leaves, and is of an anomalous figure, sometimes in the shape of a fan, and at other times conical: the ovary becomes a fruit, resembling a bladder four cornered, divided into four cells, and pregnant with roundish seeds. This plant produces large spikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black sweet liquor, from whence it is supposed to derive its name. Miller.

HONEY-GNAT. n. f. [melis, Latin; honey and gnat.] An insect.HONEY-MOON. n. f. [honey and moon.] The first month after marriage, when there is nothing but tenderness and pleasure.

A man should keep his fiery for the latter season of marriage, and not begin to droop till the honey-moon is over. Addison.

HONEY-SUCKLE. n. f. [aprisalium, Latin.] Woodbine.

It hath a climbing stalk, which twists itself about whatever tree stands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, consisting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermost of which is subdivided into two, and the lowermost is cut into many segments: the tube of the flowers is bent, somewhat resembling a huntsman's horn. They are produced in clusters, and are very sweet. Miller enumerates ten species, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her steal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the fun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by prince, that advance their pride
Against the power that bred it. Shakespeare.

Watch upon a bank

L. With ivy canopied, and interweave

With faunting honey-suckle. Milton.

Then mellow beat, and honey-suckles pound;

With these alluring favours threw the ground. Dryden.

HONEYLESS. adj. [from honey.] Without honey.

But for your wounds, they rob the Hybla bees,

And leave them honeyless. Shakespeare.

HONEY-WORTH. n. f. [veritute, Latin.] A plant.

It hath glaucous deep green leaves, which are, for the most part, beset with prickles: the flowers are cylindrical, consisting of one leaf, in shape like those of comfrey, and are pendulous: each flower turns to the top of the second page of the third leaf following. Miller.

HONORARY. adj. [honorarius, Latin.]

1. Done in honour.

There was probably some distinction made among the Romans between such honorary arches erected to emperors, and those that were raised to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches.

This monument is only honorary; for the ashes of the emperor lie elsewhere. Addison.

2. Conferring honour without gain.

The Romans abound with these little honorary rewards, that, without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them. Addison.

HONOUR. n. f. [honor, French; honor, Latin.]

1. Dignity; high rank.

2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill husband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the falling wherein may disgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon.

3. The title of a man of rank.

Return unto my lord,

Bid him not fear the separated councils:

His honour and myself are at the one;

And at the other is my good friend Cateby. Shakespeare.

4. Subject of praise.

Thou happy father,

Think that the clearest gods, who make them honours

Of man's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee. Shakespeare.

5. Nobleness of mind; scorn of menials; majesty.

Now shall I see thy love; what motive may

Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?

—That which upholdeth him, that thee upholdeth.

His honour. Oh, thine honour, Lewis; thine honour. Shakespeare.

If by honour is meant any thing distinct from esteem, 'tis no more than a regard to the censure and esteem of the world. Reyn.

6. Reverence; due veneration.

They take thee for their mother,

And every day do honour to thy grave. Shakespeare.

There, my lord,

The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury,

Who holds his state at door, amongst purfuitants.

—Ha! 'tis he, indeed!

Is this the honour they do one another?

This is a duty in the fifth commandment, requires our prince and our parent, under the name of honour, respect, which, in the notion of it, is, in a manner of love and fear, and, in the object, equally supposes grades and power. Reyn.

7. Chastity.

Be she honour flow'd,

I have three daughters, the eldest is eleven;

If this prove true, they'll pay for't.

She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my fool dares not prevent itself: she is too young to be looked against. Shakespeare.

8. Dignity of men.

Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,

Godlike erect! with native honour clad,

In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all. Milton.

9. Glory; boast.

A late eminent person, the honour of his profession in gray and learning. Reyn.

10. Public mark of respect.

He saw his friends, who whelm'd beneath the wave,

Their fun'ral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quest. Milton.

Such discourses, on such mournful occasions as these, were instituted not so much in memory of the dead, as for the use of the living. Reyn.

Numbers engage their lives and labours, some to keep together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end; others, in an honour, that, at best, can be celebrated but by an accidentable part of the world, and is envied and coveted by more than 'tis truly given. Reyn.

11. Privileges of rank or birth.

Henry the seventh, truly pitying

My father's loss, like a most royal prince,

Restor'd me to my honours; and, from ruin,

Made my name once more noble. Shakespeare.

12. Cavities paid.

Then here a slave, or if you will a lord,

To do the honours, and to give the word. Pope.

13. Ornament; decoration.

The fire then took the honours of his head,

And from his brows dashes of oblivion shed. Dryden.

My hand to thee, my honour on my promise.

To honour. v. a. [honorer, French; honors, Latin.] Shakespeare.

1. To reverence; to regard with veneration.

He was called our father, and was continually revered

all men, as the next person unto the king. Edm. m. th.

The poor man is honoured for his skill, and the rich is honoured for his riches. Edm. m. th.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in wealth!

How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not. Pope.

2. To dignity; to raise to greatness.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our honour

The evile of rebellion, insence, faction,

Which we ourselves have plow'd for, sow'd and scatter'd.

By mingling them with us, the honour'd number, Shakespeare.

I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after me, and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his

that the Egyptians may know that I am the Lord. Exod.

HONOURABLE. adj. [honorable, French.]

1. Illustrious; noble.

Sir, I'll tell you,

Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him

That I think honourable. Shakespeare.

Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the court?

city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are we honourable of the earth? Shakespeare.

2. Great; noble.

It is a noble for a nobleman. Shakespeare.

or their country. Shakespeare.

Many of those persons, who put this honourable talk on me, were more able to perform it themselves. Dryden

4. Accompanied with tokens of honour.
Sith this wretched woman overcome,
Of anguish, rather than of crime hath been,
Preserve her cause to her eternal doom;
And in the mean, vouchsafe her honourable tomb. Fa. 2.

5. Not to be disgraced.
Here's a Bohemian tartar tarrise the coming down of thy fat woman:—let her defend, my chambers are honourable. Sh.

6. Without taint; without reproach.
As he was honourable in all his acts, so in this, that he took Joppa for an haven. Mar.

7. Honest; without intention of deceit.
Methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just and his quarrel honourable. Shakespeare.

8. Honest; without intention of deceit.
The earl felt again to know if they would entertain their pardon, in case he should come in person, and assure it: they answered, they did conceive him to be so honourable, that from himself they would most thankfully embrace it. Hayward.

- If that thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow. Shak.

8. Equitable.
HO'NOURABLENESS, n. f. [from honourable.] Eminence; magnificence; generosity.

- HO'NOURABLY, adv. [from honourable.]
1. With tokens of honour.

- The rev'rend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him. Shakespeare.

2. Magnanimously; generously.
After some six weeks distance of time, which the king did honourably interpose, to give space to his brother's intercession, he was arraigned of high treason, and presently after condemned. Bacon.

3. Reputably; with exemption from reproach.
'Tis just, ye gods! and what I will deserve:
Why did I not more honourably starve! Dryden.

- HO'NOURER, n. f. [from honour.] One that honours; one that regards with veneration.

- I must not here omit to do justice to Mr. Gay, whose zeal in your concern is worthy a friend and honourer. Pope.

- HOOD, in composition, is derived from the Saxon hob, in German hüt, in Dutch bid. It denotes quality; character; condition: as, knighthood; childhood; fatherhood. Sometimes it is used after the Dutch, as maidenhood. Sometimes it is taken collectively: as, brotherhood, a confraternity; sisterhood, a company of sisters.

- HOOD, n. f. [Doe, Saxon, probably from hoo, head.]
1. The upper covering of a woman's head.

- In velvet, white as frown, the troop was gown'd;
Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryden.

2. Any thing drawn upon the head, and wrapping round it.
Undertaking to go gesture and muffle up himself in his hood, as the duke's manner was to ride in cold weather, that none should discern him. Hutton.

- The lacerna came, from being a military habit, to be a common dress: it had a hood, which could be separated or joined to it. A-butmet.

3. A covering put over the hawk's eyes, when he is not to fly.
4. An ornamental fold that hangs down the back of a graduate, to mark his degree.

- HOOD, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To dress in a hood.

- The cobler apion'd, and the parson gown'd,
The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd. Pope.

2. To blind, as with a hood.
While grace is saying, I'll hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and sigh, and fay, amen. Shakespeare.

3. To cover.
An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above;
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames that to their quarry strove. Dryd.

- HOODMAN'S BLIND, n. f. A play in which the person hooded is to catch another, and tell the name; blindman's buff.

- What devil was't
That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman blind? Shak.

- HOOD-WINK, v. o. [hood and wink.]
1. To blind with something bound over the eyes.

- They willingly hood-wink themselves from seeing his faults, he often abused the virtue of courage to defend his foul vice of injustice. Sidney.

- We will bind and hood-wink him so, that he shall suppose he is carried into the league of the adversaries. Shakespeare.

- You may
Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hood-wink. Shak.

- Then she who hath been hood-wink'd from her birth,
Doth first herself within death's mirror see. Davies.

- So have I seen, at Christmasts sports, one loff,
And hood-wink'd for a man embrace a poft. B. Johnson.

- Nº LXX.

Satan is fain to hood-wink those that are apt to start.

Prejudice so dexterously *hood-wink*s mens minds as to keep them in the dark, with a belief that they are more in the light. Decay of Piety.

Must I wed Rodogune?
Fantastick cruelty of hood-wink'd chance!
On high, where no hoarse winds or clouds refozt,
The hood-wink'd goddess keeps her partial court. Locke.

2. To cover; to hide.
Be patient; for the prize, I'll bring thee to,
Shall hood-wink this mischance. Shakespeare.

3. To deceive; to impose upon.
She delighted in infamy, which often she had used to her husband's shame, filling all mens ears, but his, with reproach; while he, hood-wink'd with kindness, least of all men knew who struck him. Sidney.

HOOF, n. f. [Doe, Saxon; huf, Dutch.] The hard horny substance on the feet of gaminivorous animals.

With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets. Ezekiel.

The bull and ram know the use of their horns as well as the horse of his hoofs. Mere.

HOOFED, adj. [from hoof.] Furnished with hoofs.
Among quadrupeds, the roe-deer is the swiftest; of all the hoofed, the horse is the most beautiful; of all the clawed, the lion is the strongest. Gruu.

HOOF-BOUND, adj. [hoof and bound.]
A horse is said to be hoof-bound when he has a pain in the forefoot, occasioned by the dryness and contraction or narrowness of the horn of the quarters, which flattens the quarters of the heels, and oftentimes makes the horse lame. A hoof-bound horse has a narrow heel, the sides of which come too near one another, inasmuch that the flesh is kept too tight, and has not its natural extent. Farris's Ditt.

HOOK, n. f. [Doe, Saxon; hock, Dutch.]
1. Any thing bent so as to catch hold: as, a shepherd's hook and pot hook.

This falling net, for that they had not far enough undermined it, they allayed with great hooks and strong ropes to have pulled it down. Kutlis.

2. The curved wire on which the bait is hung for fishes, and with which the fish is pierced.

Like unto golden hooks,
My bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws. Shakespeare.

Though divine Plato thus of pleasures thought,
They us with hooks and baits, like fishes, caught. Denden.

3. A snare; a trap.
A fop of all the qualitis that man
Loves woman for, besides that hook of wiving,
Fairness, which strikes the eye. Shakespeare.

4. A fickle to reap corn.

Hope is that pleasure in the mind which every one feels to himself, upon the thought of a profitable future employment. Shakspeare.

things, which is apt to delight him. Shakspeare.

When in heav'n the shall his essence see,
This is her sov'reign good, and perfect bliss;
Her longings, wishings, hopes, all finish'd be;
Her joys are full, her motions rest in this.
Sweet hope! kind cheat! fair fallacy! by this
We are not where or what we be;
But what and where we would be: thus art thou lost. Shakspeare.

Our absent presence, and our future now. Shakspeare.

HOP

Faith is opposed to infidelity, and hope to despair. Taylor.
He fought them both, but with'd his hap might find Eve separate: he with'd, but not with hope
Of what fo seldom chanc'd: when to his with,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies. Paradise Lost.

The Trojan dames
To Pallas' fane in long procession go,
In hope to reconcile their heav'nly foe. Dryden.
Why not comfort myself with the hope of what may be, as torment myself with the fear on't? L'Estrange.

To encourage our hope it gives us the highest assurance of most lasting happiness, in case of obedience. Tillotson.

The deceased really lived like one that had his hope in another life; a life which he hath now entered upon, having exchanged hope for fight, desire for enjoyment. Atterbury.

Young men look rather to the past age than the present, and therefore the future may have some hope of them. Swift.
2. Confidence in a future event, or in the future conduct of any body.

It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God, to be raised up again by him. 2 Act. vii. 14.
Blessed is he who is not fallen from his hope in the Lord.
Ecclesi. xiv. 2.

I had hope of France,
Ev'n as I have of fertile England's soil. Shakespeare.

3. That which gives hope; that on which the hopes are fixed, as an agent by which something desired may be effected.

I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quartered. Shakespeare Henry VIII.

4. The object of hope.

Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;
To wit, an indigested deform'd lump. Shakespeare.

She was his care, his hope, and his delight,
Moft in his thought, and ever in his sight. Dryden.

HOPE. n. f. Any sloping plain between the ridges of mountains.
Linnaeus.

TO HOPE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To live in expectation of good food.

Hope for good success, according to the efficacy of the causes and the instrument; and let the husbandman hope for a good harvest. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

My muse, by storms long tolt,
Is thrown upon your hospitable coast;
And finds more favour by her ill success,
Than she could hope for by her successes. Dryden.

Who knows what adverse fortune may befall!
Arm well your mind, hope little, and fear all. Dryden.

2. To place confidence in futurity.

He shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord.
Psalms, xxxi. 24.

TO HOPE. v. a. To expect with desire.

The fun shines hot; and if we use delay,
Cold-biting winter man our hope'd for hay. Shakespeare.

So stands the Thracian herdman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden's Fables.

HOPEFUL. adj. [hope and full.]

1. Full of qualities which produce hope; promising; likely to obtain success; likely to come to maturity; likely to gratify desire, or answer expectation,

He will advance thee:
I know his noble nature, not to let Thy hopeful service perish. Shakespeare Henry VIII.

You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince whom you must not desert. Bacon.

What to the old can greater pleasure be,
Than hopeful and ingenious youth to see? Denham.

They take up a book in their declining years, and grow very hopeful scholars by that time they are threefold. Addison.

2. Full of hope; full of expectation of success. This sense is now almost confined to Scotland, though it is analogical, and found in good writers.

Men of their own natural inclination hopeful and strongly conceited, whatsoever they took in hand. Hester.

I was hopeful the success of your first attempts would encourage you to make trial also of more nice and difficult experiments. Boyle.

Whatever ills the friendless orphan bears,
Bereav'd of parents in his infant years,
Still must the wrong'd T'elemachus sustain,
If hopeful of your aid, he hopes in vain. Pope's Odyssey.

HOPEFULLY. adv. [from hopeful.]

1. In such a manner as to raise hope; in a promising way.

He left all his female kindred either matched with peers of the realm actually, or hopefully with earls sons and heirs. Watt.

They were ready to renew the war, and to prosecute it hopefully, to the reduction or suppression of the Irish. Glenneden.

2. With hope; without despair. This sense is rare.

From your promising and generous endeavours we may hopefully expect a considerable enlargement of the history of nature.
Glenneden's Preface.

HOR

HOPEFULNESS. n. f. [from hopeful.] Promise of good, likelihood to succeed.

Set down beforehand certain signatures of hopefulness, or characters, whereby may be timely described what the child will prove in probability. Warton.

HOPELESS. adj. [from hope.]

1. Without hope; without pleasing expectation.

Are they indifferent, being wies as signs of immoderate and hopeless lamentation for the dead? Hester.

Alas, I am a woman, friendless, hopeless!
He watches with greedy hope to find
His wish, and best advantage, usander;
Hopeless to circumvent us join'd, where each
To other hopeless aid might lend at need. Milton.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our state,
And hopeless to prevail by open force,
Seeks hid advantage. Dryden's State of Innocence.

Hopeless of ransom, and condemn'd to lie
In duration, doom'd to a ling'ring death to die. Dryden.

2. Giving no hope; promising nothing pleasing.

The hopeless word of never to return,
Breathe I against thee upon pain of life. Shakespeare R. II.

HOPELESS. n. f. [from hope.] One that has pleasing expectations.

I except all hopeless, who turn the scale, because the strong expectation of a good certain salary, will outweigh the loss by bad rents. Swift on the Sacramental Test.

HOPEFULLY. adv. [from hoping.] With hope; with expectation of good.

One sign of despair is the peremptory contempt of the condition which is the ground of hope; the going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopefully, and confidently in wilful habits of sin. Hammond.

HOPEFUL. n. f. [from hope.] He who hops or jumps on one leg.

HOPEFULS. [commonly called Stretch hoppers.] A kind of play in which the actor hops on one leg.

HOPEFUL. n. f. [so called because it is always hopping, or in agitation.] It is called in French, for the same reason, trémie or trémou.

1. The box or open frame of wood into which the corn is put to be ground.

The falt of the lake Asphaltites shooteth into perfect cubes:
sometimes they are pyramidal and plain, like the hoppers of a mill. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill: their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it drop by degrees into the flumch. Arbutnot on Aliment.

Just at the hopper will I stand,
In my whole life I never saw grist ground,
And mark the clack how justly it will found. Bitterton.

2. A basket for carrying feed.

HOPEFUL. adj. [from hora, Latin.] Relating to the hour.

How'er reduc'd and plain,
The watch would fill a watch remain;
But if the houral orbit cease,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.

HOPEFUL. adj. [horarius, French; horarius, Latin.]

1. Relating to an hour.

I'll draw a figure that shall tell you
What you perhaps forgot befall you
By way of horary inspection,
Which some account our worst erection. Hudibras.

In his answer to an horary question, as what hour of the night to set a fox-trap, he has largely discuss'd, under the character of Reynard, the manner of surprizing all shuppers. Tatler.

2. Continuing for an hour.

When, from a basket of summer-fruit, God by Amos foretold the destruction of his people, thereby was declared the pro-pinquity of their defolation, and that their tranquility was of no longer duration than those horary or soon decaying fruits of summer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HORDE. n. f. A clan; a migratory crew of people.

Of lost mankind, in polish'd slavery sunk,
Drove martial horde on horde with dreadful sweep,
And gave the vanquish'd world another foe. Thomson.

HORIZON. n. f. [from horizon.] The line that terminates the view.

The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real: the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere.
It is falsely pronounced by Shakespeare horizon.

When the morning sun shall raise his car
Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates. Shakespeare.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must be upon the horizon of Ireland. Bacon's Henry VII.

Far in th' horizon to the North appear'd,
From skirt to skirt, a fiery region. Milton's Paradise Lost.

In his East the glorious lamp was seen,
Regent of day; and all th' horizon round
Invited with bright rays. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The morning lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning gray;
And soon the sun arose with beams so bright,
That all th' horizon laugh'd to see the joyful fight. Dryden.
When the sea is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billow, and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horror that rises from such a prospect. Addison's Spectator.

HORIZONT'AL. adj. [horizontal, French; from hor.izon.]

1. Near the horizon.

As when the sun, new risen,
Looks through the horizontal misty air,
Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,
In dim eclipse, diffusive twilight fields
On half the nations. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.

An obelisk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt by Augustus. Brown.

The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is necessary to place several ranks of rowers in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle? Arbutnot on Coins.

HORIZONTALLY. adv. [from horizontal.] In a direction parallel to the horizon.

As it will not sink into the bottom, so will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie superficially, or almost horizontally unto it. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

The ambent ether is too liquid and empty to impel them horizontally with celerity. Bentley's Sermons.

HORN. n. f. [horn, Gothick; horn, Saxon; horn, Dutch.]

1. The hard pointed bodies which grow on the heads of some gra-minivorous quadrupeds, and serve them for weapons.

No beast that hath horns hath upper teeth. Bacon.

Zelus rises through the ground,

Bending the bull's tough neck with pain,

That toils back his horns in vain. Addison on Italy.

All that process is more surprising than the eruption of horns in some brutes, or of teeth and beard in men at certain periods of age. Bentley's Sermons.

2. An instrument of wind-musick made of horn.

The squire 'gan nigher to approach,
And wind his horn under the cattle-wall,

That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Spenser.

There's a post come from my maffer, with his horn full of good news. Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.

The goddess to her crooked horn
Adds all her breath: the rocks and woo's around,

And mountains, tremble at th' infernal found. Dryden.

Fair Afcanius, and his youthful train,

With horn and hounds a hunting match ordain. Dryden.

3. The extremity of the waxing or waning moon, as mentioned by poets.

She blest'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had flarpen'd either horn,

To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryden.

The moon

Wears a wan circle round her blunted horn. Thomson.

4. The feelers of a snail. Whence the proverb, To pull in the horn, to repress one's ardour.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible,

Than are the ten-er horns of cockled snails. Shakspeare's As You Like It.

Aulus,

Hearing of our Marc'us's banishment,

Thrust forth his horns again into the world,

Which were ush'd in when Marc'us stood for Rome,

And durst not once peep out. Shakspeare's Cicerulus.

5. A drinking cup made of horn.

6. Antler of a cuckold.

If I have horns to make one mad,

Let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad. Shakspeare's As You Like It.

Merchants, vent'ring through the main,

Slight pyrates, rocks, and horns for gain. Hudibras.

7. HORN mad. Perhaps mad as a cuckold.

I am glad he went not in himself; if he had, he would have been horn mad. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

HORNBEAK. } n. f. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HORNFIN. } n. f. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HORNBEAM. n. f. [horn and beam, Dutch, for tree, from the hardness of the timber.]

It hath leaves like the elm or beech-tree: the katkins are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree, and the outward shell of the fruit is winged. This tree was formerly much used in hedges for wildernesses and orangeries.

The timber is very tough and inflexible, and of excellent use. Miller.

HORNBOOK. n. f. [horn and book.] The first book of children, covered with horn to keep it unsoiled.

He teaches boys the hornbook. Shakspeare's As You Like It.

Nothing has been considered of this kind out of the ordinary road of the hornbook and primer. Locke.

To maffer John the English maid

A hornbeak gives of ginger-bread;

And that the child may learn the better,

As he can name, he eats the letter. Prior.

HORNED. adj. [from horn.] Furnished with horns.

As when two rams, fir'd with ambitious pride,

Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flock,

Their horned fronts so fierce on either side

Do meet, that, with the terror of the flock,

Altogether both stand fenceless as a flock. Gray.

O, that I were

Upon the hill of Bafan, to out-run

'T he boar's head. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

'T hither all the horned host retires,

To graze the ranker mead. Deane.

'T hou king of horned flocks, whole plumes are

Suffices fattens to the fruitful corn. Deane.

horn.

'T he skin of a bull's forehead is the part of the hide made of by hornier, whereupon they shave their horns. Deane.

HORNET. n. f. [pyrenee, Saxon, from its horn.] A very large strong stinging fly, which makes its nest in hollow trees.

Silence, in time of suffring, is the best.

'T is dangerous to disturb a hornet's nest.

Hornets do mischief to trees by breeding in them. Deane.

I have often admired how hornets, that gather dry leaves for building their nest, have found a proper matter to make combs. Deane's Beehive.

HORNFOOT. n. f. [horn and foot.] Hoofed.

Mad frantic man,

That did not only quake!

With horns of holies, and brags wheels.

Jove's storms to emulate. Holmes's Poetical.

HORNOWL. A kind of horned owl.

HORNPIPE. n. f. [horn and pipe.] A country dance, called commonly to a horn.

A lusty taberne,

That to three many a hornpipe play'd,

Whereto they dauncen each one with his maid. Spenser.

There many a hornpipe he tun'd to his Phyllis.

Let all the quicksilver i' the mine

Run t' the feet-veins, and refine

Your firrhum jekhum to a dance

Shall fetch the fiddlers out of France,

To wonder at the hornpipes here

Of Nottingham or Derbyshire. Deane.

Florinda danced the Derbyshire hornpipe in the presence of several friends. Deane.

HORNSTONE. n. f. A kind of blue stone.

HORNWORK. n. f. A kind of angular fortification.

And saw the ravens with their berry beaks

Food to Elijah bringing even and meek. Deane.

The berry or pellucid coat of the eye doth rest in the superficies with the white of the eye, but sith it is not convexity, and is of an hyperbolic figure. Deane.

Rough are her ears, and broad her horn feet.

The pincal gland was encompassed with a kind of impen-etrance. Addison's Essay.

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates it so as to turn it berry, like pus; but when it is thoroughly putrified, it will no longer coagulate.

3. Hard as horn; callous.

'T yrrhus, the foster-father of the beast,

Then clench'd a hatchet in his berry fist. Deane.

HOROGRAPHY. n. f. [horographia, Gr. sign and place.] An account of the hours.

HOROLOGE. } n. f. [horologium, Latin.] Any instrument

HOTHOUS. n. f. [hot and house.]

1. A bagnio; a place to sweat and cup in.
Now the profligate a hot-house, which, I think, is a very ill house too. Shakspeare.

2. A brothel.
Where lately harbour'd many a famous whore,
A purging bill, now fix'd upon the door,
Tells you it is a hot-house; so it may,
And fill be a whorehouse: th' are synonyma. Ben. Johnson.

HOTLY. adv. [from hot.]

1. With heat; not coldly.
2. Violently; vehemently.
The flag was in the end so hotly pursued, that he was driven to make courage of despair. Sidney.

I do contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
And in ambitious strength I hold
Contend against thy valour. Shakspeare.
The enemy, now at hand, began hotly to skirmish in divers places with the Christians. Kneller.

Though this controversy be revived, and hotly agitated, I doubt whether it be not a nominal dispute. Boyle.

3. Lustfully.
Voracious birds, that hotly bill and breed,
And largely drink, because on salt they feed. Dryden.

HOTMOUTHED. adj. [hot and mouth.] Headstrong; ungovernable.

I fear my people's faith,
That hotmouth'd beast that bears against the curb,
Hard to be broken. Dryden.

HOTNESS. n. f. [from hot.] Heat; violence; fury.
HOTPATCH. n. f. [bauch en poche, French; or bachet en pot, French, as Camden has it, as being boiled up in a pot; yet the former corruption is now generally used.] A mingled hash;
a mixture.

Such patching maketh Littleton's hotpatch of our tongue, and, in effect, brings the same rather to a Babelish confusion than any one entire language. Camden.

A mixture of many disagreeing colours is ever unpleasant to the eye, and a mixture or hotpatch of many tastes is unpleasant to the taste. Bacon.

Nor limbs, nor bones, nor carcass would remain;
But a mash'd heap, a hotpatch of the slain. Dryden.

HOTSPUR. n. f. [hot and spur.]

1. A man violent, passionate, precipitate and heady.
My nephews trespass may be well forgot;
It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood,
A harebrain'd hotspur, govern'd by a spleen. Shakspeare.
Wars are begun by hairbrained dissolute captains, parasitical fawners, unquiet hotspurs, and restless innovators. Burton.

2. A kind of pea of speedy growth.
Of such peas as are planted or sown in gardens, the hotspur
is the speediest of any in growth. Mortimer.

HOTSPURRED. adj. [from hotspur.] Vehement; rash;
heady.

To draw Mars like a young Hippolytus, with an effeminate countenance, or Venus like that hotspurred Harpalice in Virgil, this proceeded from a feeble judgment. Peacock.

HOVE. The pretense of heave.

HOVEL. n. f. [Diminutive of poor, house, Saxon.]

1. A shed open on the sides, and covered overhead.
So likewise a hovel will serve for a room,
To flacke on the peafe, when harvest shall come. Tusser.
If you make a large hovel, thatched, over some quantity of ground, plank the ground over, and it will breed falterpe. Bacon.

Your hay it is mow'd, your corn it is reap'd,
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd. Dryden.

2. A mean habitation; a cottage.
The men clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them and milk them, and do all the dairy-work in such furr hovels and sheds as they build to inhabit in during the Summer. Roy.

TO HOVEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To shelter in an hovel.
And wait thou vain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw? Shakspeare.

HOVEN. part. pass. [from have.] Raised; swelled; raised.
Tom Piper hath hoven and puffed up cheeks;
If cheese be to hoven, make Cuck to seek coxcocks. Yate.
TO HOVEN. v. n. [hoven, to hang over, Welsh.]

1. To hang in the air over head, without flying off one way or other.

Some fiery devil hoven in the sky,
And pours down mischief.
Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not h'd in doom perpetual,
Hear about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation. Shakspeare.

A hovering mist came swimming o'er his sight,
And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night.
Great flights of birds are hovering about the hills, and settling upon it. Dryden.

'Till as the earthly part decays and falls,
The captive breaks her prison's mould'ring walls;
Hovers a-while upon the sad remains,
Which now the pile, or sepulchre, contains,
And thence with liberty unbounded flies,
Impatient to regain her native skies. Pope.

Some less reud beneath the moon's pale light,
Hover, and catch the shooting stars by night. Pope.

2. To stand in suspense or expectation.
The landlord will no longer covenant with him; for that he daily looketh after change and alteration, and hovers in expectation of new worlds. Boyle.

3. To wander about one place.
We see so warlike a prince at the head of so great an army, hovering on the borders of our confederates.
The truth and certainty is seen, and the mind hovers about it.
itself of it; in the other, it only hovers about it. Locke.

HOUGH. n. f. [poze, Saxon.]

we sneeze or cough. Locke.

HOULET. n. f. The vulgar name for an owl. The Scots and northern counties still retain it.

HOULT. n. f. [holt, Saxon.] A small wood. Chaucer.

Or as the wind, in hoult, and shady grove,
A murmur makes among the boughs and leaves. Forster.

HOUND. n. f. [pund, Saxon; hund, Scottish.] A dog used in the chase.

Hounds and greyhounds, mungrels, spaniels, curs,
Are cleft all by the name of dogs. Shakspeare.

Jafon threw, but fail'd to wound
The boar, and flew an underriding hand,
And through the dog the dart was nail'd to ground. Dryden.

The kind spaniel and the faithful hound,
Liketh that fox in shape and species found,
Pursues the noted path and covets home. Pope.

TO HOUND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set on the chase.
God is said to hound the heart permissively, but not operatively nor effectively; as he who only lets loose a hound out of the slip, is said to hound him at the hare. Bacon.

2. To hunt; to pursue.
If the wolves had been hounded by tigers, they would have worried them. Locke.

HOUNDFISH. n. f. A kind of fish.

HOUNDSFINGUE. n. f. [synagoge, Latin.] A plant.

The cup of the flower consists of one leaf, deeply cleft five parts; the flower consists of one leaf, is funnel-shaped, and cut into five segments; the point, which arises from the bottom of the flower, changes into a fruit composed of four rough, each for the most part burry cells, and containing a flat seed affixed to a pyramidal and quadrilateral placenta.
The proper season to take the roots up is soon after the leaves decay. Boyle.

HOUNDTREE. n. f. A kind of tree.

HOUP. n. f. [hupa, Latin.] The puet.

HOUE. n. f. [houer, French; houer, Latin.]

1. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; the space of forty minutes.

See the minutes how they run:
How many makes the hour full complement,
How many hours bring about the days,
How many days will finish up the years,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shakspeare.

2. A particular time. Vauvenargues.

- Vexation almost stops my breath,
That funder'd friends greet in the hour of death. Shakspeare.
When we can intreat an hour to feve,
We'll spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time. Shakspeare.
The conscious wretch must all his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.
3. The time as marked by the clock.
The hour runs through the roughest day. Shakspeare.
Our neighbour let her floor to a gentle man, who kept good hours. Tatler.
They are as loud any hour of the morning, as our own countrymen at midnight. Addison.
- HOURLASS. n. f. [hour and glass.]
1. A glass filled with sand, which, running through a narrow hole, marks the time.
Next morning, known to be a morning better by the hour- glass than by the day's clearness. Sidney.
If a man be in sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock or hourglass than with it; for the mind doth value every moment. Bacon.
O, recollect thy thoughts!
Strike not his hourglass, when his hasty hand
Is ebbing to the fall. Dryden.
2. Space of time. A manner of speaking rather affected than elegant.
We, within the hourglass of two months, have won one town, and overthrow great forces in the field. Bacon.
- HOURLY. adj. [from hour.] Happening or done every hour;
frequent; often repeated.
Alcyone
Computes how many nights he had been gone,
Observes the waining moon with hourly view,
Numbers her age, and wishes for a new. Dryden.
We must live in hourly expectation of having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us. Swift.
- HOURLY. adv. [from hour.] Every hour; frequently.
She deserves a lord
That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
And hourly call her mistress. Shakspeare.
Our estate may not endure
Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacy. Shakspeare.
They with ceaseless cry
Surround me, as thou sav'it; hourly conceiv'd,
And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
To me! Milton.
Great was their strife, which hourly was renew'd,
'Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd. Dryden.
- HOURLY. n. f. [hour and plate.] The dial; the plate on which the hours pointed by the hand of a clock are inscribed.
If eyes could not view the hand, and the characters of the hourplate, and thereby at a distance see what clock it was, their owner could not be much benefited by that utensil. Locke.
- HOUSE. n. f. [pur, Saxon; hous, Dutch; hous, Scottish.]
1. A place wherein a man lives; a place of human abode.
Sparrows must not build in his house eaves. Shakspeare.
Houses are built to live in, not to look on; therefore let use be preferred before uniformity, except where both may be had. Bacon.
In a house the doors are moveable, and the rooms square;
yet the house is neither moveable nor square. Hutton.
2. Any place of abode.
The bees with smoke, the doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driven away. Shakspeare.
3. Place in which religious or studious persons live in common;

upon madam. Swift.
5. Station of a planet in the heavens, astrologically considered.
Pure spiritual substances we cannot converse with, therefore have need of means of communication, which some make to be the celestial houses: those who are for the celestial houses worship the planets, as the habitations of intellectual substances that animate them. Stillingfleet.
6. Family of ancestors, descendants, and kindred; race.
The red rose and the white are on his face,
The fatal colours of our fliv'ring house. Shakspeare.
An ignominious ransom and free pardon
Are of two houses; lawful mercy sure
Is nothing kin to foul redemption. Shakspeare.
By delaying my last fine, upon your grace's accession to the patrimonies of your house, I may seem to have made a torture. Dryden.
A poet is not born in every race;
Two of a house's few ages can afford,
One to perform, another to record. Dryden.

7. A body of the parliament; the lords or commons collectively considered.
Nor were the crimes objected against him so clear, as to give convincing satisfaction to the major part of both houses, especially that of the lords. King Charles.
- To HOUSE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To harbour; to admit to residence.
Palladius wished him to house all the Helots, and make themselves masters of the gatus. Sidney.

dog. Addison.
- HOUSEHOLD. n. f. [house and hold.]
1. A family living together.
Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean. Shakspeare.
A little kingdom is a great household, and a great household a little kingdom. Bacon.
Of God observ'd
The one just man alive, by his command,
Shall build a wondrous ark, as thou beheld'st,
To save himself and household from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck. Milton.
He has always taken to himself, amongst the sons of men, a peculiar household of his love, which at all times he has cherished as a father, and governed as a master: this is the proper household of faith; in the first ages of the world, 'twas sometimes literally no more than a single household, or some few families. Spratt.
- Great crimes must be with greater crimes repaid,
And second funerals on the former laid;
Let the whole household in one ruin fall,
And may Diana's curse o'ertake us all. Dryden.
Learning's little household did embark,
With her world's fruitful system in her sacred ark. Swift.
In his own church he keeps a seat,
Says grace before and after meat;
And calls, without affecting airs,
His household twice a day to prayers. Swift.

I do not build my reasoning wholly on the case of perfection, howe'er I do not exclude it.

Asterbury.

Few turn their thoughts to examine how those diseases in a state are bred, that hasten its end; which would, howe'er, be a very useful enquiry.

Swift.

How. v. n. [huglen, Dutch; ulule, Latin.]

- To cry as a wolf or dog.

Metthought a legion of fowl fiends

Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears

Such hideous cries, that with the very noise

I trembling wak'd.

Shakespeare.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,

Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key.

Shakespeare.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness.

Deuteronomy.

As when a sort of wolves infest the night,

With their wild howlings at fair Cymhia's light.

Waller.

Hard as his native rocks, cold as his sword,

Fierce as the wolves that howl'd around his birth;

He hates the tyrant, and the suppliant scorns.

Smith.

2. To utter cries in distress.

Therefore will I howl, and cry out for all Moab.

Jer.

The damned use that word in hell,

Howling attend it.

Shakespeare.

Each new morn

New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows

Strike heaven on the face, that it relouds

As if it felt with Scotland.

Shakespeare.

I have words

That would be howl'd out in the desert air,

Where hearing should not catch them.

Shakespeare.

The noise grows louder still:

Rattling of armour, trumpets, drums and atabales;

And sometimes peals of shouts that rend the heav'ns,

Like victory: then groans again, and howlings

Like those of vanquish'd men.

Dryden.

3. To speak with a belline cry or tone.

Peace, monster, peace! Go tell thy horrid tale

To savages, and howl it out in deserts!

Me would'st thou make the accomplice of thy crimes?

A. Phillips's Disfranchisement.

4. It is used poetically of any noise loud and horrid.

Howl. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The cry of a wolf or dog.

Murder,

Alarm'd by his sentinel the wolf,

Whose howl's his watch.

These and the like rumours are no more than the last howls of a dog disected alive.

Shakespeare.
Swift.

2. The cry of a human being in horror.

She raves, she runs with a distracted pace,

And fills with horrid howls the publick place.

Dryden.

HOWSOE'ER. adu. [how and sever.]

1. In what manner soever. See HOWE'ER.

Berosus, who, after Moses, was one of the most ancient, howsoever he hath been since corrupted, doth in the substance of all agree.

Raleigh.

2. Although.

The man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him.

Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.

To How. v. a. [from hōg, Saxon.] To howl; to hamstring.

Thou art a coward,

Which howes honestly behind, restraining

From course required.

Shakespeare.

Lodronius, perceiving the old soldier's meaning, alighted, and with his sword howd his horse, saying aloud, This day, valiant soldiers, shall you have me both your general and fellow soldier, fighting on foot as one of yourselves.

Kantler.

How. n. f. [hou, old French.] A large boat sometimes with one deck.

He sent to Germany, strange aid to rear;

From whence efforts arrived here three boys

Of Saxons, whom he for his safety employs.

Spenser.

To define a barge and boy, which are between a boat and a ship, is hard.

Ifatti.

HU'BBUB. n. f. [I know not the etymology, unless it be from up up, or hubbub] A tumult; a riot.

People pursued the business with all contempt of the government; and in the hubbub of the first day there appeared nobody of name or reckoning, but the actors were really of the dregs of the people.

Clarendon.

An universal hubbub wild

Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd,

Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear

With loudest vehemence.

Milton.

Why wolves raise a hubbub at her,

And dogs howl when she shines in water.

Hudibras.

HU'CKABACK. n. f. A kind of linen on which the figures are raised.

HU'CKIEBACKED. adj. [hucker, German, a bunch, and back.]

HU'CKSTER. } pedlar.]

1. One who sells goods by retail, or in small quantities; a pedlar.

There cannot be a more ignominious trade than the being hucksters to such vile merchandise. Government of the Tongue.

God deliver the world from such quacks, or rather such hucksters of souls, the very shame of religion.

South.

Should thy shoe wrench aside, down, down you fall,

And overturn the scolding huckster's stall,

The scolding huckster shall not o'er thee moan,

But pence expect for nuts and pears o'erthrown.

Gay.

There should be a general confederacy of all the servants in every family, for the publick good, to drive those China huck- sters from the doors.

Swift.

Those hucksters or money-jobbers will be found necessary,

if this brass money is made current.

Swift.

2. A trickish mean fellow.

Now the ape wanted his huckster man.

Spenser.

To HU'CKSTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To deal in petty bargains.

ver, to some huckstering fellow who follows that trade.

To HUDDLE. v. a. [probably from hudd.]

1. To dress up close so as not to be discovered; to muddle.

2. To put on carelessly in a hurry.

At twelve the role with much ado;

Her cloaths were huddl'd on by two.

Prior.

Now all in haste they huddle on

Their hoods, their cloaks, and get them gone.

Swift.

3. To cover up in haste.

2. To perform in a hurry.

I have given much application to this poem: this is not a play huddl'd up in haste.

Dryden.

When continu'd rain

The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,

Let him forecast his work with timely care,

Which else his huddled when the skies are fair.

Dryden.

5. To throw together in confusion.

Our adulatory, huddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a muddle and confusion.

TO HUFFLE. v. n. To come in a crowd or hurry.

Clince an eye of pry on his loaves,
That have of late huffed on his back,
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shakspeare.
Brown answered after his blunt and huddling manner. Bacon.

Thyrsu, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
The huddling brook to hear his madrigal,
And sweeten'd every musknote of the dale. Milton.

Their eyes are more imperfect than others; for they will run against things, and huddling forwards, fall from high places. Brewer's Vulgar Etym.

HUFFLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult; confusion.
That the Authoritarian philosophy is a huddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the centre of the world. Glanville.

Your carrying business in a huddle,
Has tore'd our rulers to new model. Hudibras.
Nature doth nothing in a huddle. L'Estrange.

The understanding sees nothing distinctly in things remote,
as in a huddle. Locke.
Several merry answers were made to my question, which entertained us 'till bed-time, and filled my mind with a huddle of ideas. Adrian.

HUF. n. f. [Diere, Saxon] Adrian.
1. Colour; die.

For never in that land
Face of fair lady before did view,
Or that dread Lyon's look her call in deadly hue. Spenser.
For now three months have changed thrice their hue. Spenser, canto viii.

To add another hue unto the rainbow,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shakspeare.
Flowers of all hue, and without thorn the rose. Milton.

To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue, Answer'd. Milton.

Your's is much of the camelian hue,
To change the die with diluvial view. Dryden.

2. [Hue, French.] A clamour; a legal pursuit; an alarm given to the country.

Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knight, I am undone:
Ey, run, hue and cry! villain, I am undone. Shakspeare.
Immediately comes a hue and cry after a gang of thieves, that had taken a purse upon the road. L'Estrange.

If you should hiss, he sweats he'll hiss as high;
And, like a culprit, join the hue and cry. Addison.

The hue and cry went after Jack, to apprehend him dead or alive, wherever he could be found. Arbuthnot.

HUE. n. f. [Huer, French, to cry.] One whose business is to call out to others.

They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a barker or hue, who standeth on the cliff-side, and from thence directeth the course of the pichard. Carew.

HUFF. n. f. [from hove, or boven, swelled: he is huffed up by distension.] So in some provinces we still say the bread huffs up, when it begins to heave or ferment: buff, therefore, may be ferment. To be in a buff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]

1. Swell of sudden anger or arrogance.

Quoth Ralpho, honour's but a word
To swear by only in a loud;
In others it is but a buff. Hudibras.

To vapour with instead of proof.
His frowns kept multitudes in awe,
Before the bluster of whole buff. Hudibras.

All hats, as in a storm, flew off.
We have the apprehensions of a change to keep a check upon us in the very buff of our greatness. L'Estrange.

A Spaniard was wonderfully upon the buff about his extraction. L'Estrange.
No man goes about to ensnare or circumvent another in a passion, to lay trains, and give secret blows in a present ruff. Scot.

2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.
Lead shallow-brained buffs make atheism and contempt of religion the sole badge and character of wit. South.

As for you, colonel buff-cap, we shall try before a civil magistrate who's the greater plotter. Dryden.

TO HUFF. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To swell; to puff.

In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be huffed up with air, and blown in at the windpipe. Cress.

2. To hector; to treat with intulgence and arrogance, or brutality.
TO HUFF. v. n. To bluster; to storm; to bounce; to swell with indignation or pride.

This sleekish arrogant conceit of theirs made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them. South.
A huffing, flustering, flatting, cringing coward,
A cantervorm of peace, was rais'd above him. Ortroy.

A thief and justice, fool and knave,
A buff officer and slave, Hudibras.
Huffing to cowards, hawning to the brave,
To knights a fool, to credulous fools a knave. Roman.

Now what's his end? O charming glory, say!

What, a fifth act to crown his huffing play? Dryden.
What a small pittance of reason and truth is mixed with those huffing opinions they are swelled with. Leis.
When Peg received John's message, the huffed and stomed like the devil. Adrian.

HUFFER. n. f. [from buff.] A blusterer; a bully.
Nor have I hazarded my art
To be expos'd i' th' end to suffer,
By such a braggadocio huffer.

HUFFISH. adj. [from buff.] Arrogant; insolent; haughty.
HUFF-SILLY. adv. [from huff.] With arrogant pretensions, with silly bluster.

HUFF-SURISE. n. f. Pettulance; arrogance; noisy bluster.
TO HUFF. v. a. [pe-jan, Saxon, to heidge, to inclose.]
1. To puff close in an embrace.

He bewept my fortune,
And huffed me in his arms.

What would not he do now to huff the creature that given him so admirable a fersade! Craven.

Ev'n in that urn their brother they confest,
And bug it in their arms, and to their bosom prest. Dryden.
King Xerxes was enamoured upon an oak, which he would bug and kiss. Harley.

2. To fondle; to treat with tenderness.
I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glozing courtesy,
Batted with reasons not unplaustible,
Win me into the easy-hearted man,
And bug him into snarers.

We bug deformities, if they bear our names. Milton.
Admire yourself,

And, without rival, bug your darling book. Rymer.
Though they know that the flatterer knows the extent of his own flatteries, yet they love the imposture, as we both arms bug the abuse.

Mark with what joy he bugs the dear discovery! Kear.

3. To hold fast.
Age makes us most fondly bug and retain the possession of life, when we have the least prospect of enjoying it. Dryden.

HUG. n. f. [from the noun.] Close embrace.
Why these close hugs? I owe my shame to him. Go.

HUGE. adj. [hugh, high, Dutch.]
1. Vast; immense.

Let the state of the people of God, when they were in the house of bondage, and their manner of serving God in a strange land, be compared with that which Caesar's Jerusalem did afford, and who seeth not what hugs difference was between them? Mor.

This space of earth is so huge, as that it equalled in grandeur not only Asia, Europe and Africa, but America. Just.

2. Great even to deformity or terribleness.
The patch is kind enough, but a huge defect. Shakspeare.
Through forests huges, and long untrodden heaths,
With detolation brown he wanders walk. Tennyson.

HUGELY. adv. [from huge.]
1. Immensely; enormously.

Who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?
Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea? Shakspeare.

2. Greatly; very much.
I am hugely bent to believe, that whenever you commit yourself in our affairs, it is for our good. Swift.

HUGENESS. n. f. [from huge.] Enormous bulk; greatness.
My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of our current worthy thinking. Scott.

HUGGERMUGGER. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from hugger and mugger, or hug in the dark. Morher in Danish is darkness, hence our mug-ty. It is written by Sir Thomas More, who ever Huger, in Chaucer, is percey, crafty, of which now may be only a ludicrous reduplication. Hugle is likewise a German corner, and mugy is in English dark. I know not how to determine.] Secrecy; by-place.

Now hold in huggermugger in their hand,
And all the rest do rob of goods and land. Shakspeare.

But if I can but find them out,
Where e'er th' in huggermugger lurk,
I'll make them rue their handy-work. Hudibras.

There's a distinction between what's done openly and huggermugger, and a thing that's done in huggermugger, under a kind of secrecy and concealment. Shakspeare.

HUG. v. a. [See HUGE.] Vast; great; huge.
This hug rock one finger's force
Apparently will move. Cervantes.

HUGE. n. f. [hugue, French] A cloak.
As we were thus in conference, there came one that seemed to be a messenger in a rich robe. Bacon.

HULK. n. f. [hulke, Dutch; hulk, Saxon.]
1. The body of a ship.

There's a whole merchant's venture of hulk down'd i' th' hold him: you have not seen a hulk better stowed in the hold. Shakspeare.

The custom they had of giving the colour of the sea to the hulls, sails, and mariners of their spy-boats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Venetians. Arbutnot.

They Argo's bulk will wax.

And scrape her pitchy sides for wax. Swift.

The footy bulk

Steer'd sluggish on. Thomson.

2. Any thing bulky and unwieldy. This sense is still retained in Scotland: as, a bulk of a fellow.

And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the bulk fir John,

Is prisoner to your son. Shakespeare.

To HULK. v. a. To exonerate: as, to bulk a hare. Anfsw.

HULL. n. f. [hulgan, Gothick, to cover.]

1. The hulk or integument of any thing; the outer covering: as, the hull of a nut covers the shell. [Hule, Scotch.]

2. The body of a ship; the hulk. Hull and bulk are now confounded; but bulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky.

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

So many arts hath the Divine Wisdom put together, only for the bulk and tackle of a sensible and thinking creature.

Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

To HULL. v. n. [from the noun.] To float; to drive to and fro upon the water without sails or rudder.

They saw a sight full of piteous strangeness; a ship, or rather the carcase of the ship, or rather some few bones of the carcase, hulling there, part broken, part burned, and part drownd. Sidney.

Will you hoist sail, fir? here lies your way.

—No, good swabber, I am to bulk here a little longer. Shak.

He look'd and saw the ark hull on the flood,

Which now abated. Milton.

People walking down upon the shore, saw somewhat come hulling toward them. L'Estrange.

Ho' ULLY. adj. [from hull.] Silique; husky. Anfsworth.

Ho' ULVER. n. f. Holly.

Save hulver and thorn, thereof flail for to make. Tusser.

To HUM. v. a. [humulus, Dutch.]

1. To make the noise of bees.

The humming of bees is an unequal buzzing. Bacon.

An airy nation flew,

Thick as the humming bees that hunt the golden dew

In summer's heat. Dryden.

So weary bees in little cells repose;

But if night-robbers lift the well-flor'd hive,

An humming through their waxen city grows. Dryden.

I think he'll hear me: yet to bite his lip,

And hum at good Cominius, much unheard me. Shakespeare.

Upon my honour, fir, I heard a humming,

And that a strange one too, which did awake me. Shakespeare.

The cloudy messenger turns me his back,

And hums; as who should say, you'll rue. Shakespeare.

3. To pause in speaking, and supply the interval with an audible emission of breath.

Having pump'd up all his wit,

And hum'd upon it, thus he wret. Hudibras.

I still acquiesc,

And never hum'd a haw'd sedition,

Nor flumm'd treason. Hudibras.

The man lay humming and hawing a good while; but, in the end, he gave up himself to the physicians. L'Estrange.

Still humming on, their drowsy course they keep,

And last'd so long, like tops, are last'd asleep. Pope.

4. To sing low.

The musical accents of the Indians, to us, are but inarticulate *humming*s; as are ours to their otherwise tuned organs.

Glaville.

Hum half a tune. Pope.

5. To applaud. Approbation was commonly expressed in public assemblies by a hum, about a century ago.

HUM. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of bees or insects.

To black Hecat's hummons

The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hum,

Hath rung night's yawning peal. Shakespeare.

Nor undelightful is the ceaseless hum,

To him who mufes through the woods at noon. Thomson.

2. The noise of bustling crowds.

From camp to camp, through the soul womb of night,

The hum of either army rilly founds. Shakespeare.

Tower'd cities please us then,

And the busy hum of men. Milton.

One theatre there is of vast resort,

Which whilome of requests was call'd the court;

But now the great exchange of news 'tis light,

And full of hum and buzz from noon 'till night. Dryden.

3. Any low dull noise.

Who fat the nearest, by the words o'ercome,

Slept fast; the distant nodded to the hum. Pope.

N° LXXXI.

4. A pause with an inarticulate sound.

These thrugs, these hums and haws,
When you have laid she's goodly, come between,
'Ere you can say she's honest. Shakespeare.

Your excuses want some grains to make 'em current: hum

and haw will not do the business. Dryden.

5. In Hudibras it seems used for hum.

And though his countrymen the Huns,

Did stew their meat between their hums

And the horses backs o'er which they straddle,

And ev'ry man eat up his saddle. Hudibras.

6. An expression of applause.

You hear a hum in the right place. Spektator.

HUM. interject. A sound implying doubt and deliberation.

Let not your ears despise the heaviest sound

That ever yet they heard. Shakespeare.

—Hum! I guess at it.

See fir Robert—hum!

And never laugh for all my life to come. Pope.

HUMAN. adj. [humanus, Latin; humain, French.]

1. Having the qualities of a man.

It will not be asked whether he be a gentleman born, but whether he be a human creature. Swift.

2. Belonging to man.

The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakespeare.

For man to tell how human life began

Is hard; for who himself beginning knew? Milton.

Thee, serpent, subtil'st beast of all the field,

I knew; but not with human voice indu'd. Milton.

Intuitive knowledge needs no probation, nor can have any,

this being the highest of all human certainties. Lacke.

HUMANÉ. adj. [humaine, French.] Kind; civil; benevolent;

good-natured.

Love of others, if it be not spent upon a few, doth naturally spread itself towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable. Bacon.

Envy, malice, covetousness and revenge are abolished:

a new race of virtues and graces, more divine, more moral,

more humane, are planted in their stead. Spratt.

HUMANELY. adv. [from humane.] Kindly; with good-nature.

1. The nature of man.

Look to thyself; reach not beyond humanity. Sidney.

A rarer spirit never did steer humanity. Shakespeare.

The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends. Shakespeare.

To preserve the Hebrew intire and uncorrupt, there hath been used the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown.

2. Humankind; the collective body of mankind.

If he can untie those knots, he is able to teach all humanity, and will do well to oblige mankind by his informations. Glas.

3. Benevolence; tenderness.

All men ought to maintain peace, and the common offices of humanity and friendship in diversity of opinions. Lacke.

How few, like thee, enquire the wretched out,

And court the offices of soft humanity?

Like thee reserve their raiment for the naked,

Reach out their bread to feed the crying orphan,

Or mix their pitying tears with those that weep? Rowe.

4. Philology; grammatical studies.

To HUMANIZE. v. a. [humaniser, French.] To soften; to make susceptible of tenderness or benevolence.

Here will I paint the characters of woe,

And hear my faithful tears in showers shall flow,

To humanize the flints whereon I tread. Wotton.

Was it the business of magic to humanize our natures with compassion, forgiveness, and all the instances of the most extensive charity? Addison.

HUMANITY. n. f. [human and kind.] The race of man; mankind.

Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd;

A knowledge both of books and humankind. Pope.

HUMANLY. adv. [from human.]

Thus the present happy prospect of our affairs, humanly

speaking, may seem to promise. Atterbury.

2. Kindly; with good-nature. This should be humanely.

Though learn'd, well bred; and though well bred, sincere;

Modestly bold, and humanly severe. Pope.

HUMBLD. n. f. [from hum and bird.] The hummingbird.

All ages have conceived the near the least of birds, yet our own plantations have shewed us one far less; that is, the hum-

bird, not much exceeding a beetle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HUMBLE. adj. [humilis, French; humilis, Latin.]

1. Not proud; modest; not arrogant.

And mighty proud to humble weak does yield. Spenser.

Now we have shewn our power;

Let us seem humbler after it is done,

Than when it was a doing.

Thy humble fervent vows obedience,

And faithful service, 'till the point of death.

We should be as humble in our imperfections and sins as Christ was in the fulness of the spirit, great wisdom, and perfect love.

Chuse you for me; for well you understand:

But if an humble husband may requit,

Provide and order all things for the best.

Ten thousand trifles light as these,

Nor can my rage nor anger move:

She should be humble, who would please;

And the most fulker, who can love.

2. Low; not high; not great.

'Th' example of the heav'nly lark,

Thy fellow-poet, Cowley, mark!

Above the skies let thy proud music found,

Thy humble nest build on the ground.

Denied what ev'ry wretch obtains of fate,

An humble roof and an obscure retreat.

Ah! prince, hadst thou but known the joys which dwell

With humble fortunes, thou wouldst curse thy royalty.

Far humbler titles suit my lost condition.

To HUMBLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make humble; to make submissive; to make to bow down with humility.

'Take this purse, thou whom the heav'n's plagues

Have humbled to all strokes.

The executioner

Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,

But first begs pardon.

Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you.

Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart.

Why do I humble thus myself, and suing

For peace, reap nothing but repulse and hate.

Let the sinner put away the evil of his doings, and humble himself by a speedy and sincere repentance: let him return to God, and then let him be assured that God will return to him.

2. To crush; to break; to subdue; to mortify.

Yearly injoin'd, some say, to undergo

This annual humbling certain number'd days,

To dash their pride, and joy, for man seduc'd.

We are pleased, by some implicit kind of revenge, to see him taken down and humbled in his reputation, who had so far raised himself above us.

The mistress of the world, the seat of empire,

The nurse of heroes, the delight of gods,

'That humbled the proud tyrants of the earth.

Men that make a kind of insult upon society, ought to be humbled as disturbers of the public tranquillity.

Fortune not much of humbling me can boast;

Though double tax'd, how little have I lost!

3. To make to confend.

This would not be to confend to their capacities, when he humbles himself to speak to them, but to loise his design in speaking.

4. To bring down from a height.

In process of time the highest mountains may be humbled into valleys; and again, the lowest valleys exalted into mountains.

HUMBLEBEE. n. f. [from humble and bee.] A buzzing wild bee.

The honeybags steal from the humblebees,

And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs.

This puts us in mind once again of the humblebees and the tinderboxes.

HUMBLEBEE. n. f. A herb.

HUMBLEBEE EATER. n. f. A fly that eats the humblebee.

HUMBLENESS. n. f. [from humble.] Humility; abience of pride.

With how true humbleness

They look'd down to triumph over pride!

I am rather with all subjected humbleness to thank her excellencies, since the duty thereunto gave me rather heart to fave myself than to receive thanks for a deed which was her only inspiring.

It was answered by us all, in all possible humbleness; but yet with a countenance, that we knew that he spoke it but mer-itly.

A grain of glory, mixt with humbleness,

Coars both a fever and heargickness.

HUMBLER. n. f. [from humble.] One that humbles or subdues himself or others.

HUMBLEMOUTHED. adj. [humble and mouth.] Mild; meek.

You are meek and humblemouth'd; but your heart

Is cramm'd with arrogance, spleen and pride.

HUMBLEPLANT. n. f. A species of sensitiveplant.

The humbleplant, so called because, as soon as you touch it, it prostrates itself on the ground, and in a short time elevates itself again, is raised in hotbeds.

HUMBLE. n. f. Entrails of a deer.

HUMBLESS. n. f. [from humble.] Humbleness; humility.

And with meek humbleness, and afflicted mood,

Pardon for thee, and grace for me intreat.

HUMBLE. adv. [from humble.]

1. Without pride; with humility.

They were us'd to bend,

To fend their smiles before them to Achilles,

To come humbly as they us'd to creep to holy altars.

Here the tam'd Euphrates humbly glides,

And there the Rhine submits her swelling tides.

Write him down a slave, who, humbly proud,

With presents begs preferences from the crowd.

In midst of dangers, fears, and death,

Thy goodness I'll adore;

And praise thee for thy mercies past,

And humbly hope for more.

2. Without height; without elevation.

HUMDRUM. adj. [from hum, drum, or humming drum.] Dull;

dronish; stupid.

Shall we, quoth they, stand still humdrum,

And see stout Bruin all alone,

By numbers basely overthrown?

I was talking with an old humdrum fellow, and when I had heard his story out, was called away by business.

To HUMECT. v. a. [humect, Latin; humectate, Fr.]

To HUMECTATE. v. a. To wet; to moisten.

The Nile and Niger do not only moisten and congregate the air by their exhalations, but refresh and humectate the earth by their annual inundations.

Her rivers are wheeled up into small cataracts, and are divided into sluices, to humectate the bordering soil, and make it wonderfully productive.

The medicaments are of a cool humecting quality, and not too much altringent.

HUMECTATION. n. f. [humectation, Fr. from humectare.] The act of wetting; moistening.

Plates of brass, applied to a blow, will keep it down from swelling: the cause is repercussion, without humectation, or entrance of any body.

That which is concreted by exsiccation, or exsiccation of humidity, will be resolved by humectation, as earth and clay.

HUMERAL. adj. [humeral, Fr. from humerus, Latin.] Belonging to the shoulder.

The largest crooked needle should be used, with a ligature, in taking up the humeral arteries in amputation.

HUMICUBATION. n. f. [humus and cubus, Latin.] The act of lying on the ground.

Fasting and sackcloth, and ashes and tears, and peniten-tions, used to be companions of repentance.

HUMID. adj. [humidus, French; humidus, Lat.] Wet; watery.

Is there, with humid bow,

Waters the odoriferous banks that blow

Flowers of more mingl'd hue

Than her purpl'd scarf can show.

The queen, recover'd, rears her humid eyes,

And first her husband on the poop espies.

If they slip easily, and are of a fit size to be against a heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in against, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid.

HUMIDITY. n. f. [humiditas, Fr. from humidus.] That quality

we call moisture, or the power of wetting other bodies. It differs very much from fluidity, depending altogether on the congruity of the component particles of any liquor to the surfaces of such particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quicksilver is not a moist liquor, in respect to hands or clothes, and many other things it will not stick to;

but it may be called so in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whose surfaces it will presently adhere. And even water will that wets almost every thing, and is the great fluid of humidity, is not capable of wetting every thing; for it sticks and runs easily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages, and many other plants; and it will not wet the scales of ducks, swans, and other water-fowl.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross warm

purpion: we'll teach him to know turtles from jugs.

O blessing-breeding sun, draw from the earth

Rotten humidity: below thy filter's orb

Infect the air.

Young animals have more tender fibres, and more than old animals, which have their juices more relidging.

HUMILIATION. n. f. [French.]

1. Descent from greatness; act of humility.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter a humiliation of manhood; for which cause there followed upon the latter an exaltation of that which was humbled; for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience.

Hooker.

Thy humiliation shall exalt

With thee thy manhood also to this throne.

2. Mortification; external expression of sin and unworthiness. Milton.
John fared poorly, according unto the apparel he wore, that is, of camel's hair; and the doctrine he preached was humiliation and repentance. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

With tears

Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air

Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign

Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton.

3. Abatement of pride.

It may serve for a great lesson of humiliation to mankind, to behold the habits and passions of men trampling over interests, friendship, honour, and their own personal safety, as well as that of their country. Swift.

HUMILITY. n. f. [humilitas, French.]

1. Freedom from pride; modesty; not arrogance.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

I do not know that Englishman alive,

With whom my soul is any jot at odds,

More than the infant that is born to-night;

I thank my God for my humility. Shakespeare.

What the height of a king tempteth to revenge, the humility of a Christian teacheth to forgive. King Charles.

The humility of the flyle gained them many friends. Clarendon.

There are some that use

Humility to serve their pride, and seem

Humble upon their way, to be the prouder

At their with'd journey's end. Dryden.

It is an easy matter, when there is no danger of a trial, to extol humility in the midst of honours, or to begin a fast after dinner. South.

As high turrets, for their airy steep,

Require foundations in proportion deep;

And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot;

As to the nether heavens they drive the root;

So low did her secure foundation lie,

She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

2. Act of submission.

All with these humilities they satisfied the young king, and by their bowing and bending avoided the present storm. Daniel.

HUMMER. n. f. [from hum.] An applauder. Ainsworth.

HUMORAL. adj. [from humour.] Proceeding from the humours.

This sort of fever is comprehended under continual humoral fevers. Harvey.

HUMORIST. n. f. [humorista, Italian; humoriste, French.]

1. One who conducts himself by his own fancy; on who gratifies his own humour.

The wit sinks imperceptibly into an humorist. Spektator.

This humorist keeps to himself much more than he wants, and gives a vast refuse of his superfluities to purchase heaven. Addison's Spectator.

The notion of a humorist is one that is greatly pleased, or greatly displeased, with little things; his actions seldom directed by the reason and nature of things. Watts.

2. One who has violent and peculiar passions.

By a wife and timous inquisition the peccant humours and humorists must be discovered and purged, or cut off: mercy, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon.

HUMOROUS. adj. [from humor.]

1. Full of grotesque or odd images.

Some of the commentators tell us, that Marjia was a lawyer who had lost his cause; others that this passage alludes to the story of the false Marjias, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addison on Italy.

Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,

Lies all neglected, all forgot;

And penive, war'ring, melancholy,

Thou dead'st and hop'st thou know'st it not what. Prior.

2. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the present whim.

I am known to be a humorous patrician; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint; hasty and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakespeare.

Thou fortune's champion, that do'st never fight

But when her humorous ladyship is by,

To teach thee safety. Shakespeare.

He's humorous as winter, and as sudden

As flows congel'd in the spring of day. Shakespeare.

O, you awake then: come away,

Times be short, are made for play;

'The humorous moon too will not stay:

What doth make you thus delay?

Val's his courage, boundless is his mind, Bon. Johnson.

Ro'gh as a storm, and humorous as the wind, Dryden.

6

He that would learn to pass a just sentence on persons and things, must take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs. Watts.

3. Pleasant; jocular.

HUMOROUSLY. adj. [from humorous.]

1. Merrily; jocosely.

A cabinet of medals Juvenal calls, very humorously, con-

cisum argutum in titulis facisque minutis. Addison.

We resolve by halves, and unadvisedly; we resolve rashly, filily, or humorously, upon no reasons that will hold. Calamy.

It has been humorously said, that some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

2. With caprice; with whim.

HUMOROUSNESS. n. f. [from humorous.] Fickleness; capricious levity.

HUMORSOME. adj. [from humor.]

1. Peevish; petulant.

2. Odd; humorous.

Our science cannot be much improved by masquerades; where the wit of both sexes is altogether taken up in continuing singular and humorous disguises. Swift.

HUMORSOMELY. adv. [from humorous.] Peevishly; petulantly.

HUMOUR. n. f. [humour, French; humor, Latin.]

1. Moisture.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray.

2. The different kind of moisture in man's body, reckoned by the old physicians to be phlegm, blood, choler, and melancholy, which, as they predominated, were supposed to determine the temper of mind.

Believe not these suggestions, which proceed

From anguish of the mind and humors black,

That mingle with thy fancy. Milton.

3. General turn or temper of mind.

As there is no humor, to which impudent poverty cannot make itself serviceable; so were there enow of those of desperate ambition, who would build their houses upon others ruin. Sidney.

There came with her a young lord, led hither with the humour of youth, which ever thinks that good whose goodness he sees not. Sidney.

King James, as he was a prince of great judgment, so he was a prince of a marvellous pleasant humor: as he was going through Lufen by Greenwich, he asked what town it was; they said Lufen. He asked, a good while after, what town is this we are now in? They said still it was Lufen: said the king, I will be king of Lufen. Bacon.

Examine how your humor is inclin'd,

And which the ruling passion of your mind. Resfmann.

They, who were acquainted with him, know his humor to be such, that he would never constrain himself. Dryden.

In cases where it is necessary to make examples, it is the humor of the multitude to forget the crime, and to remember the punishment. Addison.

Good humor only teaches charms to last,

Still makes new conquests, and maintains the past. Pope.

4. Present disposition.

It is the curse of kings to be attended

By slaves, that take their humors for a warrant

To break into the blood-house of life. Shakespeare.

Another thought her nobler humor led. Fairfax.

Their humors are not to be won,

But when they are impos'd upon. Hedibras.

Tempt not his heavy hand;

But one submissive word which you let fall,

Will make him in good humor with us all. Dryden.

5. Grotesque imagery; jocularly; merriment.

1. Difeald or morbid disposition.

He was a man frank and generous; when well, denied himself nothing that he had a mind to eat or drink, which gave him a body full of humors, and made his fits of the gout frequent and violent. Temple.

7. Petulance; peevishness.

Is my friend all perfection, all virtue and discretion? Has he not humors to be endured, as well as kindnesses to be enjoyed? South.

8. A trick; a practice.

I like not the humor of lying: he hath wronged me in some humors: I should have born the humour'd letter to her. Shakespeare.

9. Caprice; whim; predominant inclination.

In private, men are more bold in their own humors; and in consort, men are more obnoxious to others humors; therefore it is good to take both. Bacon.

10. HUMOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

To gratify; to soothe by compliance.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humor him; men;

if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow. Shakespeare.

If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,

He should not humor me. Shakespeare.

Obsequence

Obedience and subjection were never enjoined by God to humour the passions, lusts, and vanities of those who are commanded to obey our governors. Swift.

You humour me, when I am sick;

Pope.

Children are fond of something which strikes their fancy moist, and sullen and regardless of every thing else, if they are not humoured in that fancy. Watts.

2. To fit; to comply with.

To after age thou shalt be with the man,

That with smooth air could'st humour best our tongue. Milt.

'Tis my part to invent, and the musicians to humour that invention. Dryden.

Fountainbleau is situated among rocks and woods; that give a fine variety of savage prospects: the king has humoured the genius of the place, and only made use of so much art as is necessary to regulate nature. Addison.

HUMP, n. f. [corrupted perhaps from bump. See BUMP.] The protuberance formed by a crooked back.

These defects were mended by succeeding matches; the eyes were opened in the next generation, and the bump fell. Tatler.

HUMPHACK, n. f. [hump and back.] Crooked back; high shoulders.

The chief of the family was born with an humphack and very high nose. Tatler.

HUMPRACKED, adj. Having a crooked back.

TO HUNCH, v. a. [hunch, German.]

1. To strike or punch with the fist.

Jack's friends began to hunch and punch one another: why don't you go and cut the poor fellow down? Arbuthnot.

2. [Häcker, a crooked back, German.] To crook the back.

Thy crooked mind within hunch'd out thy back,

And wander'd in thy lumb: to thy own kind

Make love, if thou can'st find it in the world. Dryden.

HUNCHBACKED, adj. [hunch and back.] Having a crooked back.

His person deformed to the highest degree, flat-nosed, and hunchbacked. L'Estrange.

But I more fear Creon!

To take that hunchback'd monster in my arms,

Th' excrement of a man. Dryden and Lee.

The second daughter was peevish, haggard, pale, with saucer-eyes, a sharp nose, and hunchbacked. Arbuthnot.

HUNDRED, adj. [punb, punpeeb, Saxon; bunder, Dutch.] The number consisting of ten multiplied by ten.

A bafe, proud, three suited, hundred pound, filthy, worsted Rocking knave. Shakspeare.

A hundred altars in her temple smoke,

A thousand bleeding hearts her pow'r invoke. Dryden.

Many thousands had seen the transactions of our Saviour, and many hundred thousands received an account of them from the mouths of those who were eye-witnesses. Addison.

HUNDRED, n. f.

1. A company or body consisting of an hundred.

Very few will take this proposition, that God is pleased with the doing of what he himself commands, for an innate moral principle: whoever does so, will have reason to think hundreds of propositions innate. Locke.

Lands, taken from the enemy, were divided into centuries or hundreds, and distributed amongst the soldiers. Arbuthnot.

2. A canton or division of a county, perhaps once containing an hundred manors. [Hundredum, low Latin; hundreds, old French.]

Imposts upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loseth in the shire. Bacon.

For justice they had a bench under a tree, where Ket usually sat, and with him two of every hundred whence their companies had been raised: here complaints were exhibited. Hayward.

HUNDREDTH, adj. [punnepeunzeogopa, Saxon.] The ordinal of an hundred; the tenth ten times told.

We shall not need to use the hundredth part of that time, which themselves bestow in making invectives. Hooker.

If this medium is rarer within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundredth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop any where. Newton's Opt.

Living. The preterite and part. pass. of hang.

A wife to hang with virtues, such a freight,

What mortal shoulders can support! Dryden.

A room that is richly adorned, and hang round with a great variety of pictures, strikes the eye at once. Watts.

HUNGER, n. f. [punzer, Saxon; hunger, Dutch.]

1. Desire of food; the pain felt from fasting.

An uneasy sensation at the stomach for food. When the stomach is empty, and the fibres in their natural tension, they draw up to close as to rub against each other, so as to make that sensation: but when they are distended with food, it is again removed; unless when a person fasteth so long as for want of spirits, or nervous fluid, to have those fibres grow too flaccid to corrugate, and then we say a person has fallen away in the stomach; and this is occasioned by the attrition of the coats of the stomach against each other.

Thou shalt serve three enemies in hunger and in thirst. Seneca.

The sub-acid part of the animal spirits, being call'd off by fibres, and thereby produces the senile we call hunger. Desartre.

Something viscous, fat and oily, remaining in the stomach, destroys the tension of hunger. Arbuthnot.

2. Any violent desire.

The immaterial felicity we expect, do naturally suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites and hunger to satisfy without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Dean of St. Paul.

TO HUNGER, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel the pain of hunger.

Widely they gape, and to the eye they roar,

As if they hunger'd for the food they bore. Calder.

2. To desire with great eagerness.

Do'st thou hunger for my empty chair,

That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honours,

Before thy hour be ripe? O, foolish youth,

Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee!

Stay but a little. Shakspeare.

My more having, would be as a sauce

To make me hunger more. Shakspeare.

I content me

And from the sting of famine fear no harm,

Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts than feed

Me hunger more to do my father's will. Milton.

HUNGERBIT, adj. [hunger and bit.] Pained or starved.

HUNGERBITTEN, adj. ended with hunger.

His strength shall be hungerbitten, and destitute shall be ready at his side. Job.

Thyself

Bred up in poverty and straits at home;

Lost in a desert here, and hungerbit. Milton.

HUNGERLY, adj. [from hunger.] Hungry; in want of nourishment.

His beard

Grew thin and hungerly, and seem'd to ake

His sops as he was drinking. Shakspeare.

HUNGERLY, adv. With keen appetite.

You have sav'd my longings, and I feed

Most hungerly on your sight. Shakspeare.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;

They eat us hungerly, and, when they're full,

They belch us. Shakspeare.

HUNGERSTARVED, adj. [hunger and starved.] Starved with hunger; pinched by want of food.

All my followers to th' eager foe

Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind,

Or lambs pursu'd by hungerstarved wolves. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

O'ertake me, if thou can'st; I fear thy hunger.

Go, go, cheer up thy hungerstarved men. Shakspeare.

As to some holy house th' afflicted came,

Th' hungerstarv'd, the naked, and the lame,

Want and diseases, fled before her name. Dryden.

HUNGRY, adj. [from hunger.] Pinched by want of food.

Odours do in a small degree nourish, and we are not hungry love to smell hot bread. Bacon.

HUNGRILY, adv. [from hungry.] With keen appetite.

Thus much to the kind rural gods we owe,

Who pity'd suff'ring mortals long ago;

When on harsh acorns hungryly they fed,

And gave 'em nicer palates, better bread. Dryden.

HUNGRY, adj. [from hunger.]

1. Feeling pain from want of food.

That face of his the hungry cannibals

Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

They that talk thus may say that a man is always hungry, but that he does not always feel it; whereas hunger consists in that very sensation. Locke.

2. Not fat; not fruitful; not prolific; more disposed to draw from other substances than to impart to them.

Cassius has a lean and hungry look. Shakspeare.

The more fat water will bear soap best; for the hungry water

Doth kill its unctuous nature. Bacon.

In rushy grounds springs are found at the first and second spit, and sometimes lower in a hungry gravel. Addison.

To this great day of retribution our Saviour refers us, as reaping the fruits that we here sow in the moist hungry and barren soil. Shakspeare.

HUNKS, n. f. [hunk, Saxon, hunk, Dutch.] A coarse unwholesome wretch; a milker; a curmudgeon.

The old hunks was well served, to be tricked out of a whole hog for the securing of his puddings. Dryden.

She has a husband, a jealous, covetous, old hunk. Dryden.

Ihus has given all the intimations of being a hunk. Dryden.

worth money. Dryden.

To HUNT. v. a. [hūntian, Saxon, from hūn, a dog.] Spenser

1. To chase wild animals.

The man that once did fell the lion's skin,
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him. Spenser Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions? Jab.

We should single every criminal out of the herd, and hunt him down, however formidable and overgrown; and, on the contrary, shelter and defend virtue. Addison

2. To pursue; to follow close.

Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. Psalms
The heart strikes five hundred farts of pulses in an hour, and is hunted unto four continual palpitations, through anxiety that pain would it break. Harvey

3. To search for.

Not certainly affirming any thing, but by conferring of times and monuments, I do hunt out a probability. Spenser
All that is found in books is not rightly deduced from the principles it is pretended to be built upon: such an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, especially in those who have given themselves up to a party, and only hunt for what may favour and support the tenets of it. Locke

4. To direct or manage hounds in the chase.

He hunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hares. Addison

To HUNT. v. n.

1. To follow the chase.

When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him. Shakespeare
Esau went to the field to hunt for venison.
One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking
and hunting. Locke

On the old pagan tombs masks, hunting matches, and Bac-chanals are very common. Addison

2. To pursue or search.

Very much of kin to this is the hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect and refuse those which favour the other side. Locke

HUNT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pack of hounds.

The common hunt, though from their rage restrain'd
By sov'reign pow'r, her company disdain'd,
Grinn'd as they pass. Dryden

2. A chase.

The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green. Shakespeare

3. Pursuit.

I've heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree,
Escap'd the hunt. Shakespeare

HUNTER. n. f. [from hunt.]

1. One who chases animals for pasture.

If those English lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, bogs, and woods within the limits of forests, chases and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains. Davies

Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milton

Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryden

This was the arms or device of our old Roman hunters; a passage of Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Melceager for their patron. Addison

Bold Nimrod first the savage chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope

2. A dog that scents game or beats of prey.

Of dogs, the val'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter. Shakespeare

HUNTINGHORN. n. f. [hunting and horn] A bugle; a horn used to cheer the hounds.

Whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his huntinghorn and jole. Prior

HUNTRESS. n. f. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chase.

And thou thrice crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy hunter's name, that my full life doth sway. Shakespeare
Shall I call

Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted quiver, for ever chaste. Milton

Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntress, and her virgin train;
Nor envy Windsor. Pope

Homer represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder;
but at the same time he describes her as an huntress. Broom

HUNTSMAN. n. f. [hunt and man.]

1. One who delights in the chase.

Like as a huntsman, after weary chase,
N° LXXI.

Seeing the game escape from him away,
Sits down to rest him.

Such game, whilst yet the world was new, Spenser

The mighty Nimrod did pursue:

What huntsman of our feeble race, Waller

Or dogs, dare such a monster chase?

2. The fervant whose office it is to manage the chase.

Apply this moral rather to the huntsman, that managed the chace, than to the master. L'Estrange

HUNTSMANSHIP. n. f. [from huntsman.] The qualifications of a hunter.

At court your fellows every day

Give th' art of rhiming, huntsman'shop, or play. Dennis

HURDLE. n. f. [dyrbel, Saxon.] A texture of sticks woven together; a crate.

Settle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither. Shakespeare

The blacksmith was hanged, drawn, and quartered at Ty-burn; taking pleasure upon the hurdle, to think that he should be famous in after times. Bacon

'T he sled, the tumble, hurdles and the flail,

These all must be prepar'd. Dryden

HURDS. n. f. The refuse of hemp or flax.

To HURL. v. a. [from hurl, to throw down, Islandick; or,
according to Stinner, from whirl.]

1. To throw with violence; to drive impetuously.

If heav'n's have any grievous plagues in store,
O, let them keep it till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation Shakespeare

He holds vengeance in his hand,

To hurl upon their heads that break his law. Shakespeare's Richard III.

I with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,

To hurl at the beholders of my flame. Shakespeare

If he thrust him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait. Numbers

They use both the right hand and the left in hurling stones. Chronicler

Hurl ink and wit,

As madmen stones. Brown's Johnson

His darling sons,

Hurl'd headlong to partake with us, shall curse

Their frail original and faded bliss. Milton

She strikes the lute; but if it found,

Threatens to hurl it on the ground. Waller

Corrupted light of knowledge hurl'd

Sin, death, and ignorance o'er all the world. Dennis

Young Phaeton,

From east to north irregularly hurl'd,

First set himself on fire, and then the world. Dryden

Conjure him far to drive the Grecian train,

And hurl them headlong to their fleet and main. Pope

2. To utter with vehemence. [Hurler, French, to make an howling or hideous noise.]

The glad merchant that does view

His ship far come from watry wilderness,

He hurts out vows. Spenser

Highly they rag'd against the Highest,

Hurling defiance toward the vault of heav'n. Milton

3. To play at a kind of game.

Hurling taketh its denomination from throwing of the ball, and is of two sorts; to goals, and to the country: for hurling to goals there are fifteen or thirty players, more or less, chosen out on each side, who strip themselves, and then join hands in ranks, one against another: out of these ranks they match themselves by pairs, one embracing another, and so pass away; every of which couple are to watch one another during this play. Carew

HURL. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult; riot; commotion.

He in the fame hurl murdering such as he thought would withstand his desire, was chosen king. Kneller

HURLBAT. n. f. [hurl and bat.] Whirlbat. Amfworth

HURLER. n. f. [from hurl.] One that plays at hurling.

The hurler must hurl man to man, and not two set upon one man at once. Carew

HURLWIND. n. f. [hurl and wind.] A whirlwind; a violent gust. A word not in use.

Like scatter'd down by howling Eurus blown,

By rapid hurleinds from his mansion thrown. Sands

HURLY. n. f. [I have been told that this word owes its origin to two neighbouring families named

Hurl and Hurly, or Hurleigh and Hurleigh, which filled their part of the kingdom with contests and violence. If this account be rejected, the word must be derived from hurl, hurly, and hurly, a ludicrous reduplication. Hurlede, French; hur- lurede, inconsiderately.] Tumult; commotion; bustle.

Winds take the ruffian billows by the top,

That with the hurly death itself awakes. Shakespeare

Poor discontented,

Which gape and rub the elbow at the news

Of hurlyburly innovation. Shakespeare

Methink,

Me thinks, I fee this hurly all on foot. Shakespeare.

All places were filled with tumult and hurlyburly, every man measured the danger by his own fear; and such a pitiful cry was in every place, as in cities presently to be besieged. Knolles.
HURRICANE. n. f. [huracan, Spanish; ouragan, French.] A violent storm, such as is often experienced in the eastern hemisphere.

Blow winds, and crack your cheeks;

Your cataracts and hurricanes spout. Shakespeare.
 A storm or hurricane, though but the force of air, makes a strange havoc where it comes. Burnet.

A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays stark raging mad: all was tempestuous and blustering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end. Dryden.

The ministers of state, who gave us laws,
 In corners with selected friends withdraw;
 There, in deaf murmurs, solemnly are wise,
 Whisk'ring like winds, ere hurricanes arise. Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
 Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
 Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
 Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away. Addison.

To HURRY. v. a. [perjanz, to plunder, Saxon: hurs was like-wife a word used by the old Germans in urging their horfes to speed; but seems the imperative of the verb.] To hasten; to put into precipitation or confusion; to drive confusedly.

Your nobles will not hear you; but are gone

To offer service to your enemy;

And wild amazement hurries up and down

The little number of your doubtful friends. Shakespeare.

For whom all this haste

Of midnight march, and hurried meeting here? Milton.

Impetuous lust hurries him on to satisfy the cravings of it. South.

That hurried o'er

Such swarms of English to the neighb'ring shore. Dryden.

A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtues, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage. Addison.

Stay these sudden gusts of passion,

That hurry you away. Rever.

If a council be called, or a battle fought, you are not coldly informed, the reader is hurried out of himself by the poet's imagination. Pope.

To HURRY. v. n. To move on with precipitation.

Did you but know what joys your way attend,

You would not hurry to your journey's end. Dryden.

To HURT. v. a. [hurten, Saxon; hurten, French.] To hurt, to wound, to strike, to strike, French.] To hurt, to wound, to strike, to strike, French.]

Among all the horrible hurries in England, Ireland was then almost quiet. Hayward.

It might have pleased him in the present heat and hurry of his rage; but must have displeased him infinitely in the sedate reflection. South.

After the violence of the hurry and commotion was over, the water came to a state somewhat more calm. Woodward.

Ambition raises a tumult in the soul, it inflames the mind, and puts it into a violent hurry of thought. Addison.

A long train of coaches and six ran through the heart, one after another, in a very great hurry. Addison.

I do not include the life of those who are in a perpetual hurry of affairs, but of those who are not always engaged. Ad.

The pavement sounds with trampling feet,

And the mixt hurry barricades the street. Gay.

To HURST. n. f. [hurst, Saxon.] A grove or thicket of trees. Ans.

To HURT. v. a. preter. I hurt; past. pass. I have hurt. [hurten, wounded, Saxon; hurten, to strike, French.]

1. To mischief; to harm.

Virtue may be assail'd, but never hurt;
 Surpriz'd by unjust force, but not enthrall'd. Milton.

2. To wound; to pain by some bodily harm.

My heart is turn'd to stone; I strike it, and it hurts my hand. Shakespeare.

The Adonis of the sea is so called, because it is a loving and innocent fish, that hurts nothing that has life. Warton.

It breeds contempt

For herds to listen, or presume to pry,

When the hurt lion groans within his den. Dryden.

To HURT. n. f. (from the verb.)

1. Harm; mischief.

The hurt which cometh thereby is greater than the good. Spenser.

I found it stand there uncorrected, as if there had been no hurt done. Baker.

2. Wound or strife.

Where is he wounded?

—There will be large cicatrices to shew the people: he received seven hurts in his body. Shakespeare.

Carter adventured bravely, and received two great hurts in his body. Hayward.

The pains of sickness and hurt, hunger, thirst and cold, all men feel. Lake.

In arms and science 'tis the same,
 Our rival's hurt create our fame. Pope.

To HURTER. n. f. (from hurt.) One that does harm.

HURTFUL. adj. (hurt and fall.) Mischievous; pernicious. Secret neglect of our duty is but only our own hurt: one man's contempt of the common prayer of the church of God may be most hurtful unto many. Hale.

The hurtful haze in thy vineyard shun,

Nor plant it to receive the setting sun.

To HURTFULLY. adv. (from hurtful.) Mischievously; perniciously.

HURTFULNESS. n. f. (from hurtful.) Mischievousness; perniciousness.

To HURTLE. v. n. [hurter, French; urter, Italian.] To clash; to skirmish; to run against any thing; to jolt; to meet in shock and encounter.

The noise of battle hurts in the air.

Kindness, nobler even than revenge,

And nature stronger than his just occasion,

Made him give battle to the lions,

Who quickly fell before him; in which hurting, Southey.

From miserable slumber I awak'd.

To HURTL. v. a. To move with violence or impetuosity.

This is probably the original of hurt.

His harmful club he 'gan to hurt high,

And threaten battle to the fairy knight. Spenser.

To HURTLERY. n. f. [hurter, Danish.] Bilberry.

HURTLESS. adj. (from hurt.)

1. Innocent; harmless; innoxious; doing no harm.

Unto her home he oft would go.

Where bold and hurtless many a play he tries,

Her parents liking well it should be so;

For simple goodness shined in his eyes.

She joy'd to make proof of her cruelty Southey.

On gentle dame, to hurtless and to true.

Shorter every gasp he takes,

And vain efforts and hurtless blows he makes. Dryden.

2. Receiving no hurt.

To HURTL. v. n. (from hurtless.) Without harm.

Your neighbours have found you so hurtless strong, that they thought it better to rest in your friendship than make new trial of your enmity. Southey.

The French, wisely husbanding the possession of a victory, kept themselves within their trenches. Bacon.
 If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
 That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it, Herbert.
 And give men turns of speech.
 3. To till; to cultivate the ground with proper management. Bacon.
 A farmer cannot husband his ground, if he sits at a great rent.
HUSBANDLESS. adj. [from husband.] Without an husband.
 A widow, husbandless, subject to fears; Shakespeare.
 A woman, naturally born to fears.
HUSBANDLY. adj. [from husband.] Frugal; thrifty.
 Have plots full of galls, if ye plow overthwart; Tusser.
 And compals it then, is a husbandly part.
HUSBANDMAN. n. f. [husband and man.] One who works in tillage.
 'This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your serving-man, and your husbandman. Shakespeare.
 The mule being more swift in his labour than the ox, more ground was allowed to the mule by the husbandman. Brome.
HUSBANDRY. n. f. [from husband.]
 1. Tillage; manner of cultivating land.
 He began with a wild method to run over all the art of husbandry, especially employing his tongue about well-dunging of a field. Sidney.
 As if in husbandry he ought did know,
 To plough, to plant, to reap, to sow. Spenser.
Husbandry supplieth unto us all things necessary for food. Spenser.
 Peace hath from France too long been chas'd;
 And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,
 Corrupting in its own fertility. Shakespeare.
 Her plenteous womb
 Expresseth its full tilth and husbandry. Shakespeare.
 The seeds of virtue may, by the husbandry of christian counsel, produce better fruit than the strength of self-nature. Roleigh.
Husbandry the Spaniards wanting in the valley of Mexico, could not make our wheat bear seed. Roleigh.
 A family governed with order, will fall naturally to the several trades of husbandry, tillage, and pasturage. Temple.
 Let any one consider the difference between an acre of land sown with wheat, and an acre of the same land lying without any husbandry upon it, and he will find that the improvement of labour makes the value. Locke.
 2. Thrift; frugality; parsimony.
 There's husbandry in heaven;
 The candles are all out. Shakespeare.
 You have already fared several millions to the publick, and that what we ask is too inconsiderable to break into any rules of the strictest good husbandry. Swift.
 3. Care of domestic affairs.
 Lorenzo, I commit unto your hands
 The husbandry and manage of my house. Shakespeare.
HUSH. interj. [Without etymology.] Silence! be still! no noise!
 The king hath done you wrong; but hush! 'tis so. Shak.
 There's something else to do; hush and be mute,
 Or else our spell is marr'd. Shakespeare.
HUSH. adj. [from the interjection.] Still; silent; quiet.
 As we often see, against some storm,
 A silence in the heav'n's, the rack stand still,
 The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
 As hush as death. Shakespeare.
To HUSH. v. n. [from the interjection.] To be still; to be silent.
 This frown'd, that fawn'd, the third for shame did blush;
 Another seem'd envious or covy;
 Another in her teeth did gnaw a ruff;
 But at these strangers' presence every one did hush. Spenser.
To HUSH. v. a. To still; to silence; to quiet; to appease.
 Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
 As to be hush, and nought at all to say. Shakespeare.
 It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
 Upon your Rubbion usage of the pope;
 But since you are a gentle convertite,
 My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,
 And make fair weather in your blush ring land. Shaksf.
 Speak softly;
 All's hush as midnight yet. Shakespeare.
 My love would speak; my duty hushes me. Shakespeare.
 When in a bed of straw we shrink together,
 And the bleak winds shall whistle round our heads,
 Wilt thou then talk thus to me? Wilt thou then Hush my cares thus, and shelter me with love? Ottway.
Hush'd as midnight silence go;
 He will not have your exclamations now.
 Her fire at length is kind,
 Calms ev'ry storm and hushes ev'ry wind;
 Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
 And for his hatching nephews smooths the fess. Dryden.

Upon his rising the court was hushed, and a whisper ran. Addison.
To HUSH. up. v. a. To suppress in silence; to forbid to be mentioned.
 This matter is hushed up, and the servants are forbid to talk of it. Pope.
HUSH-MONEY. n. f. [hush and money.] A bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence.
 A dextrous steward, when his tricks are found,
Hush-money sends to all the neighbours round;
 His master, unobservant of his pranks,
 Pays all the cost, and gives the villain thanks. Swift.
HUSK. n. f. [hulst, Dutch, or huycken, from huyt.] The outmost integument of fruits.
 Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
 And your fair shew shall suck away their souls,
 Leaving them but the shales and husks of men. Shaksf.
 Most feeds, in their growing, leave their husk or rind about the root. Bacon.
 Thy food shall be
 The fresh brook muskils, withered roots, and husks. Shaksf.
 Whence the acorn cradled. Shaksf.
 Fruits of all kinds, in coat
 Rough, or smooth rind, or bearded husks, or shell
 She gathers; tribute large! and on the board
 Heaps with unsparing hand. Milton.
 Some steep their feeds, and some in cauldrons boil
 O'er gentle fires; the exuberant juice to drain,
 And swell the flat'ring husks with fruitful grain. Dryden.
 Some when the prels, by utmost vigour screw'd,
 Has drain'd the pulpos mafs, regale their swine
 With the dry refuse; thou, more wife, shalt steep
 The husks in water, and again employ
 The pond'rous engine. Philips.
 Barley for ptisan was first steeped in water till it swelled;
 afterwards dried in the sun, then beat 'till the husk was taken off, and ground. Arbutnot.
 Do not content yourselves with mere words, lest you only amass a heap of unintelligible phrases, and feed upon husks instead of kernels. Watts.
To HUSK. v. a. [from the noun.] To strip off the outward integument.
HUSKED. adj. [from husk.] Bearing an husk; covered with a husk.
HUSKY. adj. [from husk.] Abounding in husks; consisting of husks.
 Most have found
 A husky harvest from the grudging ground. Dryden.
 With timely care
 Shave the goat's thaggy beard, lest thou too late
 In vain should'st seek a strainer, to dispart
 The husky terrene dregs from purer milk. Philips.
HUSKY. n. f. [corrupted from husk; taken in an ill sense.] A forry or bad woman; a worthless wench. It is often used ludicrously in slight disapprobation.
 Get you in, husky, go: now will I personate this hopeful young jade. Scutorn.
HUSKINGS. n. f. [Dutch, Saxon.] A council; a court held.
To HUSKLE. v. a. [perhaps corrupted from hurtle.] To shake together.
HUSKIFY. n. f. [corrupted from husk.]
 1. A bad manager; a forry woman. It is common to use huskify in a good, and huswife or husky in a bad sense.
 Bianca,
 A huswife, that, by selling her desires,
 Buys herself bread and cloth. Shakespeare.
 2. An economist; a thrifty woman.
 Why should you want?
 The bounteous huswife, nature, on each bush
 Lays her fulness before you. Shakespeare.
To HUSKIFY. v. a. [from the noun.] To manage with economy and frugality.
 But huskifying the little heav'n had lent,
 She duly paid a groat for quarter-rent;
 And pinch'd her belly, with her daughters two,
 To bring the year about with much ado. Dryden.
HUSWIFERY. n. f. [from huswife.]
 1. Management good or bad.
 Good huswifery trieth
 To rise with the cock;
 Ill huswifery lyeth
 'Till nine of the clock. Tusser.
 2. Management of rural business committed to women.
 If cheefes in dairie have Argus his eyes,
 Tell Cissy the fault in her huswifery lies. Tusser.
HUT. n. f. [Dutch, Saxon; hute, French.] A poor cottage.
 Our wand'ring faints, in woful state,
 To a small cottage came at last,
 Where dwelt a good old honest yeoman,
 Who kindly did these faints invite
 In his poor hut to pass the night. Swift.
 Sore

Sore pierc'd by wintry wind,
How many shrink into the sordid hut

Of cheerless poverty.

Thoufom.

HU n. f. [hucca, Saxon; hucke, French.] A corn sheaf.
The best way to keep them, after they are threshed, is to dry them well, and keep them in batches, or clove casks. Mort.
TO HUIZZ, v. n. [from the sound.] To buzz; to murmur.

HUIZZ, interj. A shout; a cry of acclamation.

The buzzas of the rabble are the fame to a bear that they are to a prince.

L'Esfrange.

It was an unfair thing in you to keep a parcel of roaring-bullocks about the day and night, who with buzzas and hunting horns never let me cool.

Abtushant.

All fame is foreign, but of true desert;
Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart;
One self-approving hour whole years outweighs
Of stupid flatters and of loud buzzas.

Pope.

TO HUIZZA, v. n. [from the interjection.] To utter exclamations.

A caldron of fat beef, and sloop of ale,

On the buzzing mob shall still prevail.

King's Cookery.

TO HUIZZA, v. a. To receive with acclamation.
He was buzzed into the court by several thousands of weavers and clothiers.

Ad ifon.

HYACINTH, n. f. [ῥάκινθος; hyacinthe, Fr. hyacinthus, Lat.]

1. A plant.

It hath a bulbous root: the leaves are long and narrow: the stalk is upright and naked, the flowers growing on the upper part in a spike: the flowers consist each of one leaf, are naked, tubulose, and cut into six divisions at the brim, which are reflexed: the ovary becomes a roundish fruit, with three angles, which is divided into three cells, which are filled with roundish seeds.

Miller.

The filken fleece, impurpl'd for the loom,

Rival'd the hyacinth in vernal bloom.

Pope.

2. The hyacinth is the fame with the lapis hyacinthus of the ancients. It is a less fleshy gem than any of the other red ones, but not without its beauty, though not gaudy. It is seldom smaller than a seed of hemp, or larger than a nutmeg. It is found of various degrees of deepness and paleness; but its colour is always a deadish red, with a considerable admixture of yellow, which even sometimes seems predominant: but its most usual is that mixed red and yellow, which we know by the name of flame-colour. This gem is found in several parts of Europe; but the finest sort comes from the East and West Indies.

Hill.

HYACINTHINE, adj. [ῥάκινθος.] Made of hyacinths.

HYADES,

HYADS, { n. f. [ῥάδες.] A watery constellation.

Then sailors quarter'd heav'n, and found a name

For ev'ry fix'd and ev'ry wand'ring star;

The pleiads, hyas.

Dryden.

HYALINE, adj. [ῥάκινθος.] Glassy; crystalline; made glass; resembling glass.

From heav'n-gate not far, founded in view

On the clear hyaline, the glassy flea.

Milton.

HYBRIDOUS, adj. [ῥάκινθος; hybrida, Latin.] Begotten between animals of different species.

Why such different species should not only mingle together, but also generate an animal, and yet that that hybridous production should not again generate, is to me a mystery. Roy.
HYDATIDES, n. f. [from ῥάκινθος.] Little transparent bladders of water in any part: most common in dropical persons, from a distention or rupture of the lympheducts; for they happen mostly in parts abounding with those vessels.

Quincy.

All the water is contained in little bladders, adhering to the liver and peritoneum, known by the name of hydatides. Wifem.

HYDRA, n. f. [ῥάκινθος, Latin.] A monster with many heads slain by Heracles: whence any multiplicity of evils is termed a hydra.

New rebellions raise

Their hydra heads, and the false north displays

Her broken league to imp her serpent wings.

Milton.

More formidable hydra stands within,

Whole jaws with iron teeth severely grin.

Dryden.

Subdue

The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew.

Dryden.

HYDRAGOGUES, n. f. [ῥάκινθος and ῥάκινθος; hydragogue, Fr.] Such medicines as occasion the discharge of watery humours, which is generally the case of the stronger cathartics, because they shake most forcibly by their vellations the bowels and their appendages, so as to squeeze out water enough to make the stools seem to be little else.

Quincy.

HYDRAULICAL, { adj. [from hydraulick.] Relating to the con-

HYDRAULICK, { v. ne of water through pipes.

Among the engines in which the air is useful, pumps may be accounted not contemptible ones, and diverts others hydraulic engines.

Derb'm.

We have employed a virtuoso to make an hydraulic engine, in which a chymical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastic channels.

Abtushant and Pope.

HYDRAULICKS, n. f. [ῥάκινθος, water, and ῥάκινθος, a pipe.]

The science of conveying water through pipes or conduits.

HYDROCELE, n. f. [ῥάκινθος; hydrocele, Fr.] A watery tumor.

HYDROCEPHALUS, n. f. [ῥάκινθος and ῥάκινθος.] A dropical head.

A hydrocephalus, or dropical of the head, is only incurable when the serum is extravasated into the ventricles of the brain.

HYDROGRAPHER, n. f. [ῥάκινθος and ῥάκινθος; hydrographer, Fr.] One who draws maps of the sea.

It may be drawn from the writings of our hydro- phr.

HYDROGRAPHY, n. f. [ῥάκινθος and ῥάκινθος; hydrography, Fr.]

Description of the watery part of the terraqueous globe.

HYDROMANCY, v. f. [ῥάκινθος and ῥάκινθος; hydromancy, Fr.]

Prediction by water.

Divination was invented by the Persians: there are five kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, geomancy, and divination.

HYDROMEL, n. f. [ῥάκινθος and ῥάκινθος; hydromel, Fr.] Honey water.

Hydromel is a drink prepared of honey, being one of the most pleasant and universal drinks the northern parts of Europe afford, as well as one of the most ancient.

In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates are pitifens and cream of barley; hydromel, that is, honey and water, when there was no tendency to a delirium. Arac.

HYDROMETER, n. f. [ῥάκινθος and ῥάκινθος.] An instrument to measure the extent of water.

HYDROMETRY, n. f. [ῥάκινθος and ῥάκινθος.] The art of measuring the extent of water.

HYDROPHOBIA, n. f. [ῥάκινθος and ῥάκινθος; hydrophobia, Fr.] Dread of water.

Among those dismal symptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the hydrophobia is the most remarkable.

HYDROPHOBIC, { adj. [ῥάκινθος and ῥάκινθος; hydrophobic, Fr.]

HYDROPHOBIC, { adj. [ῥάκινθος, Latin.] Dropical; distended with a travelsated water.

Cantharides heats the watery parts of the body; it is urine, and hydropical water.

The world's whole sap is sunk:

The general balm th' hydrophobic earth hath drunk;

Whither, as to the bedstead, life is thrust,

Dead and inter'd.

Some mens hydrophobic insatiableness learned to drink no more, by how much more they drank.

Hydrophobic swellings, if they be pure, are pellicled. Arac.

Every luit is a kind of hydrophobic distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst.

Hydrophobic wretches by degrees decay,

Growing the more, the more they wait away;

By their own ruins they themselves betray,

With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fry.

One sort of remedy he uses in dropsy, viz. the water of the hydrophobic, which is a remedy for the disease. Arac.

HYDROSTATICAL, adj. [ῥάκινθος and ῥάκινθος.] Relating to hydrostatics; taught by hydrostatics.

A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be immovable to this hydrostatic of law: there will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above, because water, the heaviest in species, will be ever in the middle. Arac.

HYDROSTATICALLY, adv. [from hydrostatic.] According to hydrostatics.

The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter: for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically, doth always contain an equal quantity of solid mass.

HYDROSTATICKS, n. f. [ῥάκινθος and ῥάκινθος; hydrostatics, Fr.]

The science of weighing fluids; weighing bodies in fluids.

HYDRO-TICK, n. f. [ῥάκινθος; hydroticks, French.] Traps of water or phlegm.

He seems to have been the first who divided pyromancy into hydroticks and purgers of bile.

HYEN, { n. f. [ῥάκινθος; hyena, Latin.] An animal.

HYENA, { a wolf said fabulously to imitate human voices

I will weep when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, when you are inclined to sleep.

A wonder more amazing would we find;

The hyena shews it, of a double kind:

Varying the sexes in alternate years,

In one begets, and in another bears.

The hyena was indeed well joined with the best, as having also a bag in those parts, if they were to understand the hyena

ederate, or civet cat.

The keen hyena, fellest of the fell.

HYGROMETER, n. f. [ῥάκινθος and ῥάκινθος; hygrometer, Fr.]

An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture.

A sponge, perhaps, might be a better hygrometer than the earth of the river.

HYGROSCOPE, n. f. [ῥάκινθος and ῥάκινθος; hygroscop, Fr.] An instrument to shew the moisture and dryness of the air, and to measure and estimate the quantity of either extreme. Arac.

Moisture in the air is discovered by the hygroscopic.

HYGROSCOPIC

HYLA'RHICAL. adj. [ἵλας and ἄρχη.] Prefiding offer matter.

HYM. n. f. A species of dog.

Avant, you curs!

Mastiff, greyhound, mungrel grim,

Hound or spaniel, braché or hym;

Or bottail tike, or trundle tail,

Tom will make him weep and wail.

Shakespeare.

HYMEN. n. f. [ἵμην.]

1. The god of marriage.

2. The virginal membrane.

HYMENEAL. n. f. [ἵμηναιος.] A marriage song.

HYMENEAL. adj. Pertaining to marriage.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring;

For her white virgins hymeneals sing.

Milton.

Pope.

HYMENEAL. adj. Pertaining to marriage.

The suitors heard, and deem'd the mirthful voice

A signal of her hymeneal choice.

Pope.

HYMN. n. f. [hymen, Fr. hymne.] An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superior being.

As I early, in praise of mine own dame,

So now in honour of thy mother dear,

An honourable hymn I ke should frame.

Spenser.

An solemn hymn to sudden dangers change;

Our bridal flow's ferre for a buried coarfe.

Shakespeare.

When steel grows

Soft as the parasite's silk, let hymn be made

An overture for the wars.

Shakespeare.

There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour.

Bacon.

Farewell, you happy shades,

Where angels first should practise hymns, and string

Their tuneful harps, when they to heav'n would sing.

Dr.

TO HYMN. v. a. [hymen.] To praise in song; to worship with hymns.

TO HYMN. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd

God and his works.

Milton.

He had not left alive this patient faint,

This anvil of affronts, but sent him hence

To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,

And hymn it in the quire.

Dryden.

HYMNICK. adj. [hymnicus.] Relating to hymns.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes

In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;

Which, if they did not die, might seem to be

A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy.

Dante.

TO HYP. v. a. [barbarously contracted from hypocondriack.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.

I have been, to the last degree, hypied since I saw you.

Spic.

HY'PALLAGE. n. f. [ὑπάλλαγξ.] A figure by which words change their cases with each other.

HYPER. n. f. [A word barbarously cuttailed by Prior from hypercritick.] A hypercritick; one more critical than necessity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.

Criticks I read on other men,

And hyper upon them again.

Prior.

HYPERBOLA. n. f. [hyperbolé, Fr. hyperbole and ballon.] In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipsis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolical section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex.

Harris.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power, been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbola's very eccentric.

Bentley.

HYPERBOLE. n. f. [hyperbolé, Fr. hyperbole.] A figure in rhetoric by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: as, he runs faster than lightning. His passions are fallen to dust. He was in want of the case of a flagellet was a mansion for him.

Shakep.

Terms unquar'd,

Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,

Would seem hyperbolé.

Shakespeare.

Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,

Three pil'd hyperbolés, spruce affectation,

Figures pedantic, these summer flies,

Have blown me full of magnet titillation.

Shakep.

They were above the hyperbolés, that fond poetry bestows upon its admir'd objects.

Glauville.

Hyperbolés, so daring and so bold,

Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules control'd;

Above the clouds, but yet within our sights,

They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight

G. ann.

The common people understand rallery, or at least rhetoric, and will not take hyperbolés in too literal a sense.

Swift.

HYPERBO'LLIC. adj. [hyperbolique, French; from hyper-

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyper-bolus.]

Cancelled in the middle with squares, with triangles before, and behind with hyperbolick lines.

Grew.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riseth up, as a hillock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical figure.

Ray.

2. [Form hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.

It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolical, and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense.

Boyle.

HYPERBO'LLICALLY. adv. [from hyperbolical.]

1. In form of an hyperbola.

2. With exaggeration or extenuation.

Yet may all be solved, if we take it hyperbolically.

Scylla is seated upon a narrow mountain, which thrusts into the sea a steep high rock, and hyperbolically described by Homer as inaccessible.

Brown.

HYPERBO'LIFORM. adj. [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.

HYPERBO'REAN. n. f. [hyperboreus, French; hyperboreus, Lat.]

Northern.

HYPERCRIT'ICK. n. f. [hypercritique, Fr. hyper and critique.]

A critick exact or capacious beyond use or reason.

Those hypercriticks in English poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges of antiquity, from the Italians and French, and from the general taste of all ages.

Dryden.

HYPERCRIT'ICAL. adj. [from hypercritick.] Critical beyond necessity or use.

We are far from imposing those nice and hypercritical punctillios, which some astrologers oblige our gardeners to.

Such hypercritical readers will consider my business was to make a body of refined sayings, only taking care to produce them in the most natural manner.

Swift.

HYPERMETER. n. f. [ὑπερμετρον.] Any thing greater than the standard requires.

When a man rises beyond six foot, he is an hypermeter, and may be admitted into the tall club.

Addison.

HYPERMARCOSIS. n. f. [ὑπερμαρκοσις, Gr. hyper and marcosis.]

The growth of fungous or proud flesh.

Where the hypermarcosis was great, I sprinkled it with precipitate, whereby I more speedily freed the ulcer of its putrefaction.

Wigman.

HY'PHEN. n. f. [ὑφην.] A note of conjunction: as, vir-tue, con-soling.

HYPO'NICK. n. f. [ὑπονικ.] Any medicine that induces sleep.

HYPOCHO'NDRES. n. f. [hypochondre, Fr. hyp and choindre.]

The two regions lying on each side the cartilago eniformis, and those of the ribs, and the tip of the breast, which have in one the liver, and in the other the spleen.

Quincy.

The blood moving too slowly through the celiac and mesenteric arteries, produce various complaints in the lower bowels and hypochondres; from whence such persons are called hypochondriack.

Arbutnot.

HYPOCHONDRICAL. adj. [hypochondrique, French; from

HYPOCHONDRICK. adj. [hypochondriack.]

1. Melancholy; disordered in the imagination.

Socrates laid down his life in attestation of that most fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack.

Decay of Piety.

2. Producing melancholy.

Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected;

as in great fears, and hypochondriack passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits.

Bacon.

HY'POCIST. n. f. [ὑποκιστος; hypociste, French.]

Hypocist is an insipidated juice in large flat masses, considerably hard and heavy, of a fine shining black colour, when broken. It is brought from the Levant, sometimes from the France, and other parts of Europe. The stem of the plant, from which it is produced, is thick and fleshy; and, what is singular, much thicker at the top than towards the bottom.

The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, which are gathered before they are ripe; and the juice is expreffed, then evaporated over a gentle fire, formed into cakes, and dried in the sun. It is an astringent medicine of considerable power.

Hill.

HYPOCRISY. n. f. [hypocrisis, Fr. hypocrisie.] Disimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer

Soft smiling and demurely looking down;

But hid the dagger underneath the gown.

Dryden.

Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal: nay, continued disguises are too great a constraint; men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private.

Swift.

HY'POCRIT'IE. n. f. [hypocrite, French; hypocrite, Lat.] A dissembler in morality or religion.

He heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer : I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shak.

A wife man hateth not the law ; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ship in a storm. Ecluf.

Fair hypocrite, you seek to cheat in vain ;

Dryden.

Your silence argues, you ask time to reign.

The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy ; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great. Suiff.

Beware, ye honest : the third circling glass

Suffices virtue : but may hypocrites,

Who slyly speak one thing, another think,

Hateful as hell, still pleas'd unwarnd drink on,

And through intemperance grow a while sincere. Philips.

HYPOCRITICAL. } adj. [from hypocrite.] Dissembling ; in-HYPOCRITICK. } cere ; appearing differently from the reality.

Now you are conferring your enormities ; I know it by that hypocritical, down-cast look. Dryden.

Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be esteemed an hypocritical imposture on the world : and in his retired pleasures, he will be presumed a libertine. Rogers.

Let others shew their hypocritick face.

Suiff.

HYPOCRITICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With dissimulation ; without sincerity ; falsely.

Simoon and Levi spake not only falsely, but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing at once their proclivities and their religion. Government of the Tongue.

HYPOGASTRICK. adj. [hypogastrique, French ; ὑπογαστρικόν, Greek.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.

The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypogastrick arteries. Hjeman.

HYPOGŌUM. n. f. [ὑπό and γῆ.] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults. Harris.

HYPOSTASIS. n. f. [hypothesis, French ; ὑπόστασις.]

1. Distinct substance.

2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypotheses in the one eternal, indivisible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those before comprised in the ancient more simple article. Hammond.

HYPOSTATICAL. adj. [hypo-statique, French ; from hypo-stasis.]

1. Constitutive ; constituent as distinct ingredients.

Let our Carneades warn men not to subscribe to the grand doctrine of the chemists, touching their three hypostatical principles, 'till they have a little examined it. Boyle.

2. Personal ; distinctly personal.

HYPOTENUSE. n. f. [hypotenuse, Fr. ὑποτένεια.] The line that subtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle ; the subtense.

The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides. Locke.

HYPOTHESIS. n. f. [hypothese, Fr. ὑπόθεσις.] A supposition ; a system formed upon some principle not proved.

The mind casts and turns itself reflexly from one thing to another, 'till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together ; sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties that seemed to lie cross, and make all the whole intelligible. Shak.

With imagin'd sovereignty

Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns :

He reigns : how long ? 'till some usurper rise ;

And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wise,

Studies new lines, and other circles reigns. Prior.

HYPOTHETICAL. } adj. [hypothetique, Fr. from hypothese.] Prior.

Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if ; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move. Newton.

HYPOTHETICALLY. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon supposition ; conditionally.

The only part liable to imputation is calling her a hypocrite, yet this is proposed with modesty and doubt, and hypocritically. Johnson.

HURST, }
HURST, } Are all from the Saxon hýrta, a wood or grove. Goff.
HURST, }

HYSLOP. n. f. [hyssopus, Fr. hyssopus, Latin.] A verticillate plant, with long narrow leaves : the crest of the flower is racemose, erect, and divided into two parts : the beard is divided into three parts ; the middle part is hollowed like a spoon, having a double point, and is somewhat winged ; the whorls of the flowers are short, and at the lower part of the stalk are placed at a great distance ; but toward the top are closer joined, so as to form a regular spike. It hath been a great dispute whether the hyssop commonly known is the same which is mentioned in Scripture. Mier.

The hyssop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be the common hyssop ; for that is not the least of vegetables observed to grow upon walls ; but rather some kind of capitation, which only grow upon walls and stony places. Brown.

HYSTERICAL. } adj. [hysterique, French ; ὑστερικόν.]

HYSTERICK. } adj. [hysterique, French ; ὑστερικόν.]

1. Troubled with fits ; disordered in the regions of the womb. In hysterick women the rarity of symptoms hath of late such an astonishment upon spectators, that they report them possessed with the devil. Harris.

Many hysterical women are sensible of wind passing thro' the womb. Boer.

2. Proceeding from disorders in the womb.

Parent of vapours, and of female wit,

Who gave th' hysterick or poetick fit. Pope.

This terrible scene made too violent an impression upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a hysterical fit. Arctius ad Pope.

HYSTERICKS. n. f. [ὑστερικόν.] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though, since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long sound, as fine, thine, which is usually marked by an e final; and a short sound, as fit, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, as: thus field, yield, are spoken as fiel'd, yeild; except friend, which is spoken freind. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to s makes a mingled sound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or sound composed of the sounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the English language, as oil, coin. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word, is always expressed by y.

I consonant has invariably the same sound with that of g in giant; as jade, jet, jilt, jelt, juff.

I. primum personæ. [i, Gothick; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch]

I, gen. me; plural we; gen. us; ic, me, pe, up.

1. The pronoun of the first person, myself.

I do not like these several councils, I.

There is none greater in his house than I.

Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid.

What shall I do to be ever known,

And make the age to come my own?

I shall like beasts or common people dye,

Unless you write my elegy.

Hence, and make room for me.

When chance of business parts us two,

What do our souls, I wonder, do?

Of that book you have given us a large earnest.

Thus, having pass'd the night in fruitless pain,

I to my longing friends return again.

2. Me is in the following passage written for I.

There is but one man whom the can have, and that is me.

3. I is more than once in Shakespeare written for ay, or yet.

Hath Romeo slain himself? Say thou but I,

And that bare vowel, I, shall poison more

Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice.

Did your letters pierce the queen?

—I, sir; the took 'em and read 'em in my presence,

And now and then an ample tear trill'd down.

To JA'BBER. v. n. [gabberer, Dutch.] To talk idly; to prate without thinking; to chatter.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber

Of parties.

JA'BBERER. n. f. [from jabber.] One who talks inarticulately or unintelligibly.

Out cant the Babylonian labourers

At all their dialects of jabberers.

JA'CENT. adj. [jacens, Latin.] Lying at length.

So laid, they are more apt in swagging down to pierce than in the ja cent posture.

JACINTH. n. f. [for hyacinth, as Jerusalem for Hierusalem.]

1. The fame with hyacinth.

2. A gem of a deep redish yellow approaching to a flame colour, or the deepest amber.

JACK. n. f. [Probably by mistake from Jacques, which in French is James.]

1. The diminutive of John. Used as a general term of contempt for saucy or paltry fellows.

I am in amputation;

You will perceive that a Jack gardant cannot

Office me from my son Coriolanus.

I have in my mind

A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,

Which I will practise.

Every Jack slave hath his belly-full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match.

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of jack given them, were kept to turn the spit, or to pull off their masters boots; but when instruments were invented for both those services, they were both called jacks.

3. An engine which turns the spit.

The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed square; that the wheels be perpendicularly and strongly fixed on the squares of the splindles; that the teeth be evenly cut, and well smoothed; and that the teeth of the whorm-wheel fall evenly into the groove of the worm.

The ordinary jacks used for roasting of meat, commonly consist but of three wheels.

Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth be never so smooth, yet, if not oiled, will hardly move.

A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down.

Some strain in rhyme; the mutes on their racks

Scream, like the winding of ten thousand jacks.

4. A young pike.

No fish will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jacks.

5. [Jacque, French.] A coat of mail.

The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pike, dagger, bucklers of board, and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper.

6. A cup of waxed leather.

Dead wine, that stinks of the borrachio, sup

From a foul jack, or greasy mapple cup.

7. A small bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.

'Tis as if one should say, that a bowl equally poised, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run necessarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byass, that may decline it a little from a straight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and so run spontaneously to the jack.

8. A part of the musical instrument called a virginal.

In a virginal, as soon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the string, the sound ceaseth.

9. The male of animals.

A jack ass, for a stallion, was bought for three thousand two hundred and twenty-nine pence three shillings and four pence.

10. A support to saw wood on.

11. The colours or ensign of a ship.

12. A cunning fellow who can turn to any thing.

Jack of all trades, shew and found;

An inveterate burle, an exchange under ground,

Jack Boots. n. f. [from jack, a coat of mail.] Boots which serve as armour to the legs.

A man on horseback, in his breeches and jack boots, dressed up in a commodore and a night-rail.

Jack by the Hedge. n. f. An herb.

Jack by the Hedge is an herb that grows wild under hedges, is eaten as other sallads are, and much used in broth.

Jack Pudding. n. f. [jack and pudding.] A zani; a merry Andrew.

Every jack-pudding will be ridiculing palpable weaknesses which they ought to cover.

A buffoon is called by every nation by the name of the dish they like best: in French jeun potage, and in English jack pudding.

Jack pudding, in his party colour'd jacket,

Tosses the gloves, and jokes at ev'ry packet.

Jack a Lenten. n. f. [Jack in Lent, a poor starved fellow.] A simple thespian fellow.

You little jack-lenten, have you been true to us?

—Ay, I'll be sworn.

Jack-a-l. n. f. [chacal, French.] A small animal supposed to flart prey for the lion.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,

And raking chase-guns through our sterns they send:

Close by their fireships, like jackals, appear,

Who on their lions for the prey attend.

2. A cockcomb; an impudent.

Which is he?

—That jackanapes with scarfs. Shakespeare.

People wondered how such a young upstart jackanapes should grow so pert and saucy, and take so much upon him. Arbut.
JACKDAW. n. f. [jack and daw.] A cock daw; a bird taught to imitate the human voice.

To impose on a child to get by heart a long scroll of phrases, without any ideas, is a practice fitter for a jackdaw than for any thing that wears the shape of man. Hutton.

JACKET. n. f. [jaquet, French.]

1. A short coat; a close waistcoat.

In a blue jacket, with a cross of red. Spenser.

And hens, and dogs, and hogs are feeding by;

And here a failor's jacket hangs to dry. Swift.

Jack pudding, in his party-colour'd jacket,

JACOB'S LADDER. n. f. The fame with Greek valerian.

JACOB'S STAFF. n. f.

1. A pilgrim's staff.

2. Staff concealing a dagger.

3. A cross staff; a kind of astrolabe.

JACOBINE. n. f. A pigeon with a high tuft. Ainsworth.

JACTITATION. n. f. [jactito, Latin.] Tolling; motion; restlessness; heaving.

If the patient be surprised with jactitation, or great oppression about the stomach, expect no relief from cordials. Hare.
JACULATION. n. f. [jaculatio, jaculari, Latin.] The act of throwing missile weapons.

So hills amid' the air encounter'd hills,

Hurl'd to and fro with jaculat on dire. Milton.

JADE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Slinner derives it from gaul, a gaul, or spur.]

1. A horse of no spirit; a hied horse; a worthless nag.

Alas, what wights are these that load my heart!

I am as dull as winter-harvest sheep.

Tur'd as a jade in overlaid cart. Sidney.

When they should endure the bloody spur,

They fall their crest, and, like deceitful jades,

Sink in the trial. Shakespeare.

The horsemen fit like fixed candlesticks,

With torchflaves in their hand; and their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips. Shaksf.

To other regions

France is a stable, we that dwell in't jades;

Therefore to't war. Shakespeare.

The plain nag came upon the trial to prove those to be jades that made sport with him. L'Estrange.

False steps but help them to renew their race,

As, after flumblugs, jades will mend their pace. Pope.

2. A sorry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.

Shall these, these old jades, pass the flower

Of youth, that you have, pass you. Chapman.

But she, the cunning it jade alive,

Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive,

And flutters in her pride. Swift.

3. A young woman; in irony and slight contempt.

You see now and then some handsome young jade among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Add.

JADE. n. f. A species of stone.

The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale bluish grey, or ash-colour, and a pale green, not simple and uniform, but intermixed. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant and high polish. It is found in the East Indies, and is much used by the Turks for handles of sabres. It is to highly esteemed by the Indians as to be called the divine stone: they wear it externally as a remedy for the gravel, and an amulet to preserve them from the bite of venomous animals. Hill.

TO JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary.

With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,

The never-yet-beaten horse of Parthia

We've jaded out of th' field. Shakespeare.

It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far.

If fleet dragon's progeny at last Proves jaded, and in frequent matches call, No favour for the stallion we retain, And no respect for the degenerate strain.

The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again.

There are seasons when the brain is overtaxed or jaded by study or thinking; or upon some other accounts mental nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to admit the spirit in meditation.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.

If we live thus tamely,

To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,

Farewell nobility.

3. To employ in vile offices.

The honourable blood

Must not be shed by such a jaded groom.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.

I do not now lose myself, to let imagination jade me, let every reason excite to this.

TO JADE. v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.

Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not hold; they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and sink in the execution.

JADISH. adj. [from jade.]

1. Vitious; bad, as an horse.

That hors'd us on their backs, to show us

A jadish trick at last, and throw us. Blair.

When once the people get the jadish trick

Of throwing off their kings, no ruler's safe. Arbut.

2. Uchafse; incontinent.

'Tis to no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the honour takes her to be jadish, not all the locks and spurs in nature can keep her honest. L'Estrange.

TO JAGG. v. a. [gare, splits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.

Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides.

The jagging of pinks and gilliflowers is like the compass of oak-leaves; but they never have any small plain pale. Bo.

The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the capricious assaults, or the silent underminings of water; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains.

An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose young branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Watt.

JAGG. n. f. [from the verb.] A protuberance or excrescence.

The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jagged, or scalloped, and curiously indented round the edges. Bo.

Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jags in the hive, and make them as smooth as possible. Arbut.

JAGGY. adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.

His tow ring creit was glorious to behold;

His shoulders and his sides were fild' with gall;

Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his men;

His teeth flood jaggy in three dreadful train. Alf.

Amid' those angles, infinitely train'd,

They joyful leave their jaggy fangs behind. Tout.

JAGGEDNESS. n. f. [from jagg.] The state of being denticulated; unevenness.

First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain with your coal or lead, before you give them their sensuousness. Watt.

JAIL. n. f. [gail, French.] A goal; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. See GAOL. It is written gail in the Bible, but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotards, to the jail with him.

A dependant upon him paid six pound ready money, which poor man, he lived to repay in a jail.

He sigh'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew

'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Drake.

One jail did all their criminals restrain,

Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain. Dods.

JAILBIRD. n. f. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.

JAILER. n. f. [jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a jail.

Seeking many means to speak with her, as divers persons it, as well because she shunned it, fearing and dreading it in mind, as because of her jealous jailer

This is a jailer, to bring forth

Some monstrous malefactor. Shakespeare.

His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd;

There let him reign, the jailer of the wind;

With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call, Drake.

And boast and bluster in his empty hall.

Palamon, the pris'ner knight,

Restless for woe, arose before the light;

And with his jailer's leave, desir'd to breathe

An air more wholesome than the damp beneath. Drake.

An air more wholesome than the damp beneath. JARA.

JAKES. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology.] A house of office.
I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him. Shakespeare.

Their sordid avarice rakes

In excrements, and hires the very jakes. Dryden.
Some have filth'd the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

JALAP. n. f. [jalap, French; jalapium, low Latin.]
Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acrid and nauseous taste. It was not known in Europe 'till after the discovery of America, and had its name jalapium, or japala, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered; though it is now principally brought from the Madeiras. It is an excellent purgative in all cases where ferous humours are to be evacuated. Hill.

JAM. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

JAMB. n. f. [jambes, French.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.

No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the fore-side of the chimney jamb. Mason.

JAMBICK. n. f. [iambique, French; iambicus, Latin.] Verses composed of iambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.

In thy felonious heart does venom lie,

It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies:

Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame

In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

JA JANGLE. v. n. [jangler, French. Skinner.] To altercation;

to quarrel; to bicker in words.

Good wits will be jangling; but, gentiles agree,
This civil war of wits were much better us'd

On Navarre and his book-men. Shakespeare.

So far am I glad it did do sport,

As this their jangling I esteem a fort. Shakespeare.

There is no error which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world matter of contention and jangling. Raleigh.

JA'NGLE. v. a. To make to sound untunable.

Now see that noble and that foreigner reason,

Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harsh. Shakespeare.

'Ere Gothick forms were known in Greece,

And in our verse 'ere monkish rhimes

Had jangl'd their fantastic chimes. Prior.

JANGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow.

JANIZARY. n. f. [A Turkish word.] One of the guards of the Turkish king.

His grand visier, presuming to inveit

The chief imperial city of the West,

With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise;

The standards lost, and janizaries slain,

Render the hopes he gave his master vain. Waller.

JANNOCK. n. f. [probably a corruption of bannock.] Oat-bread. A northern word.

JANTY. adj. [corrupted from gentil, French.] Showy; fluttering.

time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying providence. Peachum.

JAPAN. n. f. [from Japan in Aja, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her bruft. Swift.

TO JAPAN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.

For not the desk with silver nails,

Nor bureau of expence,

Nor staidish well japan'd, avails

To writing of good sense. Swift.

2. To black shoes. A low phrase.

The god of fire

Among these gen'rous presents joins his part,

And aids with foot the new japanning art. Gay.

JAPAN'NER. n. f. [from japan.]

1. One skilled in japan work.

2. A shoeblacker.

The poor have the same itch;

They change their weekly barber, weekly news,

Prefer a new japanner to their shoes. Pope.

TO JAR. v. n. [from corpe, anger, Saxon; or querre, war,

French; or garren, old Teutonic, to clamour.]

1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.

Nº LXXII.

A hollow groan, a murr'ing wind arose;
Th' unun'd of iron, that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.
My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.

2. To strike or sound untuneably.

O, you kind gods!

Cure this great breach in his abused nature:

Th' unun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,

Of this child-changed father. Shakespeare.

sistent.

At last, though long, our jarring notes agree. Shaksjp.

For orders and degrees

Jar not with liberty, but well consist. Milton.

Venusus concluded his report:

A jarring murmur fill'd the factious court:

As when a torrent rolls with rapid force,

The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,

Roars horrible. Dryden.

4. To quarrel; to dispute.

When those renowned noble peers of Greece,

Through stubborn pride, among themselves did jar,

Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,

Then Orpheus with his harp their strife did bar. Spenser.

They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends, in which alone they can jar and oppoie each other. Dryden.

JAR. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.

In r, the tongue is held stiffly at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar. Helder.

2. Clash; discord; debate.

He maketh war, he maketh peace again,

And yet his peace is but continual jar:

O miserable men, that to him subject are!

Nath'less, my brother, since we passed are

Unto this point, we will appease our jar. Spenser.

Force would be right; or rather, right and wrong,

Between whose endless jar justice preides,

Would lose their names, and so would justice too. Shaksjp.

3. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. [Giarris, Italian.] An earthen vessel.

About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.

Whilst empty jars the dire defeat resound. Garth.

JARDES. n. f. [French.] Hard callous tumours in hoies, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside. This distemper in time will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light-bellied.

It is most common to managed hoies, that have been kept too much upon their haunches. Farrier's Dict.

JARCON. n. f. [jargon, French; gerigon, Spanish.] Uninteligible talk; gabble; gibberish.

Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration, yet

let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematicks, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain tuition or jargon. Bramhall.

From this last toil again what knowledge flows?

Just as much, perhaps, as flows

That all his predecessor's rules

Were empty: cant, all jargon of the schools. P. jar.

During the usurpation an infusion of embusastick jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.

JAUNDICE. n. f. [jaunisse, jaune, yellow, Fr.] A distemper from obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood; and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and frighten the motion of the blood so much through that viscus as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastric arteries, which go off from the hepatic, to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom. Quincy.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within, Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster?

Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice By being peevish? Shakespeare:

What grief hath fet the jaundice on your cheek? Shak.

Those were thy thoughts, and thou couldst judge aright, Till ill-rent made a jaundice in thy fight. Dryden.

The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the soul, tinged with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the real appearances of things.

Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

JAUNDICED. adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice. All looks infected, that th' infected spy,

As all seems yellow to the jaundic'd eye. Pope.

The same numerically true. Hudibras.

These majus is identical with magis. Hale.

Those ridiculous identical propositions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are first principles in this controversy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about rule or faith. Tillotson.

If this pre-existent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, as we clearly and distinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God. Bentley.

IDENTITY. n. f. [identité, French; identitas, school Latin.] Sameness; not diversity.

There is a fallacy of equivocation from a society in name, inferring an identity in nature: by this fallacy was he deceived that drank aqua-fortis for strong water. Brown.

Certainly those actions must needs be regular, where there is an identity between the rule and the faculty. South.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with itself existing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity. Leke.

It cuts off the sense at the end of every first line, which must always thime to the next following, and consequently produces too frequent an identity in sound, and brings every couplet to the point of an epigram. Prior.

IDES. n. f. [ides, Fr. ides, Lat.] A term anciently used among the Romans, and still retained in the Romish kalendar. It is the 13th day of each month, except in the months of March, May, July and October, in which it is the 15th day, because in these four months it was six days before the nones, and in the others four days. Trevoux.

IDIOM. n. f. [idiome, French; ἰδιωμα.] A mode of speaking peculiar to a language or dialect; the particular cast of a tongue; a phrase; phraseology.

He did romanize our tongue, leaving the words translated as much Latin as he found them; wherein he followed their language, but did not comply with the idiom of ours. Dryden.

Some that with care true eloquence shall teach,

And to just idioms fix our doubtful speech. Prior.

IDIOMATICAL. adj. [from idiom.] Peculiar to a tongue;

IDIOMATICK. adj. phraseological.

Since phrases used in conversation contract meanings by passing through the mouths of the vulgar, a poet should guard himself against idiomatick ways of speaking. Spenser.

IDIOPATHY. n. f. [idiopathie, Fr. ἰδιοπάθεια and πάθος.] A primary disease that neither depends on nor proceeds from another. Qui.

IDIOSYCRASY. n. f. [idiosyncrasy, Fr. ἰδιοσύνεσις, and κράσις.] A peculiar temper or disposition not common to another. Qui.

Whether quails, from any idiosyncrasy, or peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon heliothere, or rather sometimes but medicinally use the same. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

The understanding also hath its idiosyncrasies, as well as other faculties. Glanville.

IDIOT. n. f. [idiote, Fr. idiote, Latin; ἰδιώτης.] A fool; a natural; a changeling; one without the powers of reason.

Life is a tale,

Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,

Signifying nothing. Shakespeare.

What else doth he herein, than by a kind of circumlocution tell his humble supplicants that he holds them idiot, or base wretches, not able to get relief? Raleigh.

By idle boys and idiots vilified,

Who me and my calamities deride;

Many idiots will believe that they see what they only hear. Sandys.

IDIOTISM. n. f. [idiotisme, French; ἰδιωτισμός.]

1. Peculiarity of expression; mode of expression peculiar to a language.

Scholars sometimes in common speech, or writing, in their native language, give terminations and idiotisms suitable to their native language unto words newly invented. Hale.

2. Folly; natural imbecility of mind.

IDLE. adj. [idol, Saxon.]

1. Lazy; averse from labour.

For shame, for much to do, and yet idle. Bull.

2. Not busy; at leisure.

For often have you writ to her; and she in modesty,

Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply. Shak.

3. Unactive; not employed.

No war or battle's found

Was heard the world around,

The idle spear and shield were high up hung. Milton.

Children generally hate to be idle; all the care then is, that their busy humour should be constantly employed in something of use to them. Locke.

Supposing, among a multitude embarked in the same vessel, there are several that, in the fury of a tempest, will rather perish than work for their preservation; would it not be madness in the rest to stand idle, and rather chuse to sink than do more than comes to their share? Addison.

4. Useless; vain; ineffectual.

They alonidh'd, all resistance lost,

All courage; down their idle weapons dropp'd. Milton.

And threatening France, plac'd like a painted Jove,

Held idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.

Where was then

The power that guards the sacred lives of kings?

Why slept the lightning and the thunderbolts,

Or bent their idle rage on fields and trees,

When vengeance call'd 'em here? Dryden.

5. Worthless; barren; not productive of good.

Suffice it then, thou money god, quoth he,

That all thing idle others I refuse;

All this I need I have: what needeth me

To covet more than I have cause to use? Spenser.

Or antres vast, and desarts idle,

It was my bent to speak. Shakespeare.

The murmuring surge,

That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,

Cannot be heard so high. Shakespeare.

He

- He was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Dandel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sullaining corn. Shakespeare.
6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle story.
This answer is both idle in regard of us, and also repugnant to themselves. Hooker.
- They are not, in our estimation, idle reproofs, when the authors of needless innovations are opposed with such negatives, as that of Leo: how are these new devices brought in, which our fathers never knew? Hooker.
- His friend smil'd scornful, and, with proud contempt, Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.
- An idle reason lessens the weight of the good ones you gave before. Swift.
- How ill he wishes to recall the precious hours he has spent in trifles, and loitered away in idle unprofitable diversions. Rogers's Sermons.

TO IDLE, v. n. [from the adjective.] To lose time in laziness and inactivity.

- Yet free from this poetick madness,
Next page he says, in sober sadness,
That she and all her fellow-gods
Sit idling in their high abodes. Prior.
- IDLEHEAD, adj. [idie and head.] Foolish; unreasonable.
These idle-headed lickers reforted thither. Carver.
- Upon this loss the fell idle-headed, and to this very day stands near the place fill. L'Estrange.

IDLENESS, n. f. [from idle.]

1. Laziness; sloth; sluggishness; aversion from labour.
Nor is excess the only thing by which sin mauls and breaks men in their health, and the comfortable enjoyment of themselves thereby; but many are also brought to a very ill and languishing habit of body by mere idleness, and idleness is both itself a great sin, and the cause of many more. South.
2. Absence of employment.
All which yet could not make us accuse her, though it made us pine away for sight, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney.

- To the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness. Shakespeare.
- He fearing idleness, the nuptial of ill,
In sculpture exercis'd his happy skill. Dryden.
- Nature being liberal to all without labour, necessity imposing no idleness or travel, idleness bringeth forth no other fruits than vain thoughts and licentious pleasures. Raleigh.

3. Omission of business.
Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
My idleness doth hatch. Shakespeare.

4. Unimportance; trivialness.
5. Inefficacy; uselessness.
6. Barrenness; worthlessness.
7. Unreasonableness; want of judgment; foolishness; madness.
There is no heat of affection but is joined with some idleness of brain. Bacon.

- IDLER, n. f. [from idle.] A lazy person; a sluggard.
Many of these poor fishermen and idlers, that are commonly presented to his majesty's ships, are foolish in sea-service as that they know not the name of a rope. Raleigh.
- Thou sluggish idler, dilatory slave. Irene.

IDLY, adv. [from idle.]

1. Lazily; without employment.
I will flay myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease. Shakespeare.
2. Foolishly; in a trifling manner.
And modern Aspid, whose capricious thought
Is yet with fables of wilder notions fraught,
Too soon convinc'd, shall yield that fleeting breath,
Which play'd so idly with the darts of death. Prior.
3. Carelessly; without attention.
This from rumour's tongue
I idly heard; if true or false, I know not. Shakespeare.
- But shall we take the muse abroad,
To drop her idly on the road?
And leave our subject in the middle,
As Butler did his bear and fiddle? Prior.

4. Ineffectually; vainly.
Let this and other allegations, suitable unto it, cease to bark any longer idly against the truth, the court and passage whereof it is not in them to hinder. Hooker.

IDOL, n. f. [idole, French; εἰδωλον, eidolon, Latin.]

1. An image worshipped as God.
They did sacrifice upon the idol altar, which was upon the altar of God. 1 Mac. i. 59.
- A nation from one faithful man to spring,
Him on this side Emphrases yet residing,
Bred up in idol worship. Milton.
- The apostle is there arguing against the gnosticks who joined in the idol feasts, and whom he therefore accuses of participating of the idol god. Atterbury.
2. A counterfeit.
Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock. Zech. ii 17.

3. An image.

Never did art so well with nature strive,
Nor ever idol seem'd so much alive;
So like the man, so golden to the sight;
So bafe within, so counterfeit and light. Dryden.

4. A representation.
Men beholding to great excellence,
And rare perfection in mortality,
Do her adore with sacred reverence,
As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence. Spenser.
5. One loved or honoured to adoration.
He's honoured and lov'd by all,
The soldiers good, and people's idol. Dryden.

IDOLATER, n. f. [idolatre, French; idolatra, Latin.] One who pays divine honours to images; one who worships an idol that which is not God.

The state of idolaters is two ways miserable: first, in that which they worship they find no success; and secondly, in his hands, whom they ought to serve, there is no other thing to be looked for but the effects of most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion.

An astrologer may be no Christian; he may be an idolater or a pagan; but I would hardly think astrology to be compatible with rank atheism. Bacon.

TO IDOLATRIZE, v. a. [from idolatre.] To worship an idol; comprising idolatry, or the worship of false gods.

Neither may the pictures of our Saviour, the apostles, and martyrs of the church, be drawn to an idolatre use, or be set up in churches to be worshipped. Pocock.

IDOLATROUSLY, adv. [from idolatreus.] In an idolatreous manner.

Not therefore whatsoever idolaters have either thought or done; but let whatsoever they have either thought or done idolatreously, be so far forth abhorred. Bacon.

IDOLATRY, n. f. [idolatrie, Fr. idolatria, Lat.] The worship of images; the worship of any thing as God which is not God.

Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd and adored;
And, were there sense in his idol,
My substance should be fluted in thy steel. Shakespeare.

Idolatry is not only an accounting or worshipping that is not God which is not God, but it is also a worshipping the true God in a way wholly unfit to his nature, and particularly by the mediation of images and corporeal representations. South's Sermons.

The kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God. Acem.

IDOLIST, n. f. [from idol.] A worshipper of images. A usual word.

I to God have brought Dishonour, obloquy, and op'd the mouths
Of idolists and atheists. Milton.

TO IDOLIZE, v. a. [from idol.] To love or reverence to adoration.

Those who are generous, humble, just and wise,
Who not their gold, nor themselves idolize. Daniel.

Parties, with the greatest violation of Christian unity, do nominate themselves, not from the grand author and author of our faith, but from the first broadcaster of their idol notions. Dugdale's Hist.

IDONEUS, adj. [idoneus, Latin.] Fit; proper; conveniens; adequate.

You entangle, and so fix their saline part, by making them corrode some idoneous body.

An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void de jure idoneus, and then it ought to be conferred on an idoneous person. Locke.

IDYLL, n. f. [ιδυλλιον; idyllium, Latin.] A small short poem. I. E. for idyll, or that is.

That which raises the natural interest of money, is that which raises the rent of land, i. e. its aptness to bring in yearly to him that manages it, a greater overplus of income above his rent, as a reward to his labour. Locke.

JEALOUS, adj. [jaalous, French.]

1. Suspicious in love.
To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the flung
Are of the adder. Shakespeare.

Wear your eye thus; not jealous, not secure:
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-bounty, be abus'd; look to't.
Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband. Shakespeare.

A jealous empress lies within your arms,
Too haughty to endure neglected charms. Dryden.

2. Emulous; full of competition.
I could not, without extreme reluctance, resign the share of your beauty to another hand: give me leave to say, a of the world that I am jealous of this subject. Dryden.

3. Jealously

3. Zealously cautious against dishonour.

I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts. 1 Kings.

4. Suspiciously vigilant.

I am jealous over you with godly jealousy. 2 Cor.
His apprehensions, as his jealous nature had much of sagacity in it; or his restless and mutinous humour, transported him. Clarendon.

5. Suspiciously careful.

Although he was a prince in military virtue approved, and jealous of the honour of the English nation; yet his cruelties and paricides weighed down his virtues. Bacon.

They jealous of their secrets, fiercely oppos'd
My journey thence, with clamorous uproar
Protolling late supremacy. Milton.

How nicely jealous is every one of us of his own reputation, and yet how maliciously prodigal of other mens. Dec. of Pity.

6. Suspiciously fearful.

'Tis doing wrong creates such doubts as these;
Renders us jealous, and destroys our peace. Waller.
While the people are so jealous of the clergy's ambition, I do not see any other method left for them to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Swift.

JEALOUSLY, adv. [from jealous.] Suspiciously; emulously; with suspicious fear, vigilance, or caution.

JEALOUSNESS, n. f. [from jealous.] The state of being jealous; rivalry; suspicious; suspicious vigilance.
Nor is it hard for thee to preserve me amidst the unjust hatred and jealousy of too many, which thou hast suffered to prevail upon me. King Charlet.

JEALOUSY, n. f. [jealousie, French; from jealous.]

1. Suspicion in love.
But gnawing jealousy, out of their sight,
Sitting alone, his bitter pills did bite. Spenser.
The sweet woman leads an ill life with him; he's a very jealous man. Shakespeare.

How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embraç'd despair;
And shudd'ring fear, and green-eyed jealousy!
O love, be moderate; allay thy extasy. Shakespeare.

Why did you suffer Jachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
'To taint his noble heart and brain
With needless jealousy? Shakespeare.

Small jealousy, 'tis true, inflame desire;
Too great, not fan, but quite blow out the fire. Dryden.

2. Suspicious fear.
The obsequy in Essex, in refusing to treat with the king, proceeded only from his jealousy, that when the king had got him into his hands, he would take revenge upon him. Clar.

3. Suspicious caution, vigilance, or rivalry.

TO JERK, v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.] To scoff; to flout; to make mock.

The merry world did on a day,
With his trainbands and mates agree
To meet together where I lay,
And all in sport to jerk at me. Herbert.
Abstain from dissolute laughter, petulant uncomely jests, loud talking, and jeering, which are called indecencies and incivilities. Taylor.

TO JERK, v. a. To treat with scoffs.

My children abroad are driven to disavow me, for fear of being jerred. Howell.

JERK, n. f. [from the verb.] Scoff; taunt; biting jest; flout; joke; mock.

Midas, expos'd to all their jerks,
Had lost his art, and kept his cars. Swift.

They tip the forehead in a jerk,
As who should say—she wants it here;
She may be handsome, young and rich;
But none will burn her for a witch. Swift.

JERKER, n. f. [from jerk.] A scoff; a scorner; a mocker.

JERINGLY, adv. [from jeering.] Scornfully; contemptuously; in mock; in scoff.

He jeeringly demandeth, whether the sonorous rays are refracted? Derham.

JERCOET, n. f. A kind of sausage. Angloverb.

JEROUAH, n. f. [יְרוּחַ] The proper name of God in the Hebrew language.

JEJUNE, adj. [jejunus, Latin.]

1. Wanting; empty; vacant.
Gold is the only substance which hath nothing in it volatile, and yet meiteth without much difficulty: the melting sheweth that it is not jejune or scarce in spirit. Bacon.

2. Hungry; not saturated.
In gross and turbid streams there might be contained nutriment, and not jejune or limpid water. Brown.

3. Dry; uninteresting.
You may look upon an enquiry made up of meer narratives, as somewhat jeune. Boyle.

JEJUNENESS, n. f. [from jejune.]

1. Penury; poverty.
There are three causes of fixation: the even spreading both parts, and the jejuneness or extreme comminution of spirits. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Dryness; want of matter that can engage the attention.
JELLED, adj. [See GELLY.] Glutinous; brought to a state of viscosity.

The kiss that tips
The jellied philtre of her lips. Cleveland.

To show his love. Prior.

TO JEOPARD, v. a. [See JEOPARDY.] To hazard; to put in danger. Obsolete.

He had been accused of Judaism, and did boldly jeopard his body and life for the religion of the Jews. 2 Macabees.

JEOPARDOUS, adj. [from jeopardy.] Hazardous; dangerous.

JEOPARDY, n. f. [This word is supposed to be derived from jeu perdue, or jeu perdu. Skinner and Junius.] Hazard; danger; peril. A word not now in use.

And would ye not poor fellowship expel,
Myself would offer you t' accompany,
In this adventure's chancel jeopardy. Spenser.

Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn
To ashes ere our blood shall quench that fire:
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy. Shakespeare.

'This colour will be reprehended or encountered, by imputing to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty, or at least a casualty or jeopardy. Bacon.

TO JERK, v. a. [Jereccan, Saxon.] To strike with a quick smart blow; to lash. It is sometimes written jerke.

I lack iniquity
Sometimes to do me service: nine or ten times
I thought to've jer'd him here under the ribs. Shakespeare.

Ballings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulcifies can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all a working. Swift.

TO JERK, v. n. To strike up; to accost eagerly. This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.

Nor blush, should he some grave acquaintance meet;
But, proud of being known, will jerk and greet. Dryden.

JERK, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A smart quick lash.
Contemn the silly taunts of fleeing buffoonry; and the jerks of that wit, that is but a kind of confident folly. Gloucester.
Wit is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis; neither is it so much the morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil.

2. A sudden spring; a quick jolt that shocks or starts.
Well run 'Tawney, the abbot's churl;
His jade gave him a jerk,
As he would have his rider hurl
His hood after the kirk. Ben. Johnson.

Lobsters use their tails as fins, wherewith they commonly swim backwards by jerks or springs, reaching ten yards at once. Grew.

JERKEN, n. f. [cjerkelin, Saxon.] A jacket; a short coat; a close waistcoat.

A man may wear it on both sides like a leathern jerkin. Shakespeare.
Mistress Line, is not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin under the line; now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair, and prove a bald jerkin. Shakespeare.

Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us so fit materials for clothing as the wool of the sheep? Mordaunt.

Imagine an ambassador presenting himself in a poor tizz jerkin, and tattered cloaths, certainly he would have but small audience. Scutell.

Then stirp thee of thy carnal jerkin,
And give thy outward fellow a jerkin. Hudibras.
I walked into the sea, in my leathern jerkin, about an hour before high water. Swift.

JERKIN, n. f. A kind of hawk. Angloverb. This should be written gyrlin.

JESS, n. f. [jettes, French; jetts, Italian.] Short straps of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which the is held on the fist. Hammer.

JET

If I prove her haggard,
Though that my jetter were her dear heartstrings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune. Shakespeare.
JET'SAMINE. n. f. [See JASMINE.] A fragrant flower.
Her goodly bloom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullambines;
Her breast like lillies, ere their leaves be shed;
Her nipples, like young blossom'd jettsamines. Spenser.
JERUSALEM ARTICHOKES. n. f. See SUNFLOWER, of which they are a species.

Jerusalem artichokes are increased by small off-sets, and by quartering the roots. Martiner.

To JEST. v. n. [jesticular, Latin.] To divert or make merry by words or actions.

Jeft not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgraced.
Ecclus.

Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?
—You may jest on; but I do not like these fearful councils. Shakespeare.

JEST. n. f. [from the verb.]

- Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raise laughter.
But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake? Shakespeare.
As for jest, there are certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, and great persons. Bacon.

No man ought to have the less reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy Scriptures, because idle and profane wits can break jest upon them. Tillotson.

He had turn'd all tragedy to jest. Prior.

- The object of jests; laughing-stock.
If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me;
then let me be your jest, I deserve it. Shakespeare.

- Manner of doing or speaking feigned, not real; ludicrous,
not serious; game, not earnest.
That high All-fee, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shakespeare.
When his play-fellows chose him their king, he spoke and did those things in jest, which would have become a king in earnest. Grew.

JESTER. n. f. [from jest.]

- One given to merriment and pranks.
The skipping king, he rambl'd up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits;
Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shakespeare.

- One given to sarcasm.
Now, as a jest, I accost you,
Which never yet one friend has lost you. Swift.

- Buffoon; jackpudding.
Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many stealths, but also privy to many traitorous practices. Spenser.

JET. n. f. [xaxaz, Saxon; get, Dutch; gagetei, Latin.]

- Jet* is a very beautiful fossil, of a firm and very even structure, and of a smooth surface; found in masses, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay. It is of a fine deep black colour, having a grain resembling that of wood. The ancients recommended jet in medicine; but it is now used only in toys. It is confounded with cannel-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.
Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet. Shakespeare.
There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakespeare.

The bottom clear,
Now laid with many a fet
Of feed-pearl, ere the bath'd her there,
Was known as black as jet.
One of us in glass is set,
One of us you'll find in jet. Drayton.

Under flowing jet,
Of sunny ringlets, or of circling brown,
The neck slight shaded. Swift.

- [Jet, French.] A spout or shoot of water.
Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the next an adverse way!
For should 'th' unseen magnetick jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain their end. Thomson.

Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spurs in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Blackmore's Creation.

- A yard. Obsolete.
What orchard unrobbed escapes?
Or pullet dare walk in her jet. Pope.

To JET. v. n. [jetter, French.]

- To shoot forward; to shoot out; to intrude, to jut out.
Think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right? Tusser.

Think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right? Shakespeare.

JEW

- To strut; to agitate the body by a proud gait.
Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes. Shakespeare.
- To jolt; to be shaken. [Jetter, French.]

Upon the jetting of a hackney-coach the was thrown out of the hinder seat against a bar of iron in the forepart. W. Jones.

JETSAM. n. f. [Jetter, French.] Goods or other things JETSON. n. f. [Jetter, French.] Goods or other things after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, and belong to the lord admiral. Bayly.

JETTY. adj. [from jet.]

- Made of jet.
- Black as jet.

The people about Capo Negro, Celsa, and Malagat, are of a jetty black. Brown's Voyage Extraord.

Her hair
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd,
And in her jetty curls ten thousand Cupids play'd. Prior.

Nigrina black, and Mercadante Cupid's play'd.
Vied for his love in jetty bow'n below. Pope.

JEWEL. n. f. [Juyau, French; jewel, Dutch.]

- Any ornament of great value, used commonly at such as are adorned with precious stones.
Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture. Shakespeare.
They found him dead, and cast into the flames.
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away. Shakespeare.
The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and a private pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarmingly either the eye or envy of the world: it may pass all his pleasures into this one, is like a traveller's penny; at his goods into one jewel. Swift.

- A precious stone; a gem.
Jewels too, stones, rich and precious stones,
Stol'n by my daughter! Shakespeare.

Proud fame's imperial fest
With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great. Pope.

- A name of fondness; an appellation of tender regard.
Bid farewell to your suitors.
—Ye jewels of our father, with wail'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you. Shakespeare.

JEWEL-HOUSE, or Office. n. f. The place where the jewels are deposited.

The king has made him
Master of the jewel-house. Shakespeare.

JEWELLER. n. f. [from jewel.] One who trades in precious stones.

These grains were as like little dice as if they had been made by a jeweller. Bacon.

The price of the market to a jeweller in his trade is one thing; but the intrinsic worth of a thing to a man of taste is another. Locke.

I will turn jeweller: I shall then deal in diamonds, and all sorts of rich stones. Adams.

JEW'S-EARS. n. f. [from its resemblance of the human ear.
Slinner.] A fungus, tough and thin; and naturally, like growing, of a rumpled figure, like a flat and roundly followed cup; from an inch to two inches in length, and about two thirds of its length in breadth. Its sides are undulated, and in many places run into the hollow, so as to represent in its ridges like those of the human ear. Its substance is tough like leather, and its colour very dark. It is light when dry, of a disagreeable smell and nauseous taste. It generally grows on the lower parts of the trunks of elder-trees, especially where they are decaying. It is not much used by physicians but the common people cure themselves of sore throats with a decoction of it in milk. Hill.

An herb called jew's-ear groweth upon the lower parts of elder, and sometimes asher: in warm water it swells, and openeth extremely. Boerhaave.

JEW'S-MALLOW. n. f. [Corchorus, Latin.]

The leaves are produced alternately at the joints of the stalks: the flower has five leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the point of the flower becomes a cylindrical fruit, divided into five cells, filled with angular seeds. Rosa.
says it is found in great plenty about Aleppo as a pot-herb, the Jews boiling the leaves of this plant to eat it with their meat. Adams.

JEW'S-STONE. n. f. An extraneous fossil, being the divated spine of a very large egg-shaped sea-urchin, perfected by long lying in the earth. It is of a regular form, oblong and rounded, swelling in the middle, and gradually tapering to each end, generally about three quarters of an inch in length, and half an inch in diameter. It is ridged and furrowed alternately, in a longitudinal direction; and is commonly a pale dusky grey, with a faint cast of dusky redness.
It is found in Syria, lodged in a loose sandy stone, or in very hard earth. It is diuretic; but has been lately recommended as a lithontripic. Hill.

JEW'S-HARP. n. f. A kind of musical instrument held between the teeth, which gives a sound by the motion of a broad edge. Locke.

spring of iron, which, being struck by the hand, plays against the breath.

Ir. conjugation. [Gyp, Saxon.]

1. Suppose that; allowing that. A hypothetical particle.

Absolute approbation, without any cautions, qualifications, if or and. Hooker.

If that rebellion

Came like itself in bafe and abject routs;
I say, if damn'd commotion to appear'd;
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here.

Shakespeare.

If they have done this deed, my nob's lord.

—If I talk't thou to me of if? Thou art a traitor. Shakespeare.

This feeling of all things, because we can desire to see all things, he makes a proof that they are present to our minds; and if they be present, they can no ways be present but by the presence of God, who contains them all. Locke.

This is only an infallibility upon supposition, which amounts to this, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false.

Tillotson.

All of them suppose the apostle to have allowed the Epicurean maxim to be good; if so be there were no resurrection.

Atterbury.

Tisiphone, that oft hast heard my pray'r,

Assist, if Oedipus deserve thy care. Pope.

2. Whether or no.

Uncertain if by sugery, or chance;

But by this easy fire they all advance. Dryden.

She doubts if two and two make four:

It can't—it may be—and it must;

To which of these must Alma trust?

Nay, further yet they make her go,

In doubting if the doubts or no. Prior.

3. Though I doubt whether; suppose it be granted that.

Such mechanical circumstances, if I may so call them, were not necessary to the experiments. Boyle.

Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heav'n;

Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave. Shakespeare.

Strength from truth divided, and from just,

Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise

And ignominy; yet to glory aspire,

Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.

Their generals have been received with honour after their defeat, yours with ignominy after conquest. Addison.

IGNORAMUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Ignoramus is a word properly used by the grand inquest impanelled in the inquisition of causes criminal and publick; and written upon the bill, whereby any crime is offered to their consideration, when they mislike their evidence as defective, or too weak to make good the pretence: the effect of which word so written is, that all further inquiry upon that party, for that fault, is thereby stopped, and he delivered without further answer. Cowley.

2. A foolish fellow; a vain un instructed pretender. A low word. Tell an ignoramus, in place and power, that he has a wit and an understanding above all the world, and he shall readily admit the commendation. South.

IGNORANCE. n. f. [ignorance, French; ignoratio, Latin.]

1. Want of knowledge; unskilfulness. If all the clergy were as learned as themselves are that most complain of ignorance in others, yet our book of prayer might remain the same. Hooker.

Ignorance is the curse of God,

Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shakespeare.

Still banish your defenders, 'till at length

Your ignorance deliver you,

As most abated captives, to some nation

That won you without blows! Shakespeare.

If he have power,

Then veil your ignorance; if none, awake

Your dangerous lenity. Shakespeare.

If we see right, we see our woes;

Then what awaits it to have eyes?

From ignorance our comfort flows,

The only wretched are the wife! Prior.

2. Want of knowledge discovered by external effect. In this sense it has a plural.

Forgive us all our sins, negligences, and ignorances. C. Pray.

This ignorant present time, and I feel now

The future in the instant. Shakespeare.

In such business

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant

More learned than the ears. Shakespeare.

He that doth not know those things which are of use for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides.

Tillotson.

Fools grant what'er ambition craves,

And men, once ignorant, are slaves. Pope.

2. Unknown; undiscovered.

If you know aught, which does behove my knowledge

Thereof to be inform'd, imprison not

In ignorant concealment. Shakespeare.

3. Without knowledge of some particular.

Let not judges be to ignorant of their own right, as to think there is not left to them, as a principal part of their office, a wife application of laws. Bacon.

O visions ill foreseen! Better had I

Liv'd ignorant of future! so had borne

My part of evil only. Milton.

4. Unacquainted with. In a good sense. Ignorant of guilt, I fear not shame. Dryden.

5. Ignorantly made or done.

His shipping,

Poor ignorant baubles, on our terrible seas

Like egg-shells mov'd. Shakespeare.

IGNORANTLY. n. f. One untaught, unlettered, un instructed.

Did I for this take pains to teach

Our zealous ignorants to preach! Denham.

IGNORANTLY. adv. [from ignorant.] Without knowledge; unskilfully; without information.

The greatest and most cruel foes we have,

Are those whom you would ignorantly save. Dryden.

When a poet, an orator, or a painter has performed admirably, mirably, we sometimes mistake his blunders for beauties, and are so ignorantly fond as to copy after them. Watts.

IGNORANCE. v. a. [ignarus, French; ignarus, Latin.] Not to know; to be ignorant of. This word Boyle endeavoured to introduce; but it has not been received.

I ignored not the stricter interpretation, given by modern cricks to divers texts, by me alleged. Boyle.
Philophy would solidly be established, if men would more carefully distinguish those things that they know from those that they ignore. Boyle.

IGNOSCIBLE. adj. [ignoscibilis, Latin.] Capable of pardon. Dia.

JIG. n. f. [giga, Italian; geige, Teutonic, a fiddle.] A light carols dance, or tune.

When Cyrus had overcome the Lydians, that were a warlike nation, instead of their warlike music, he appointed to them certain lascivious lays and loose jigs; by which he so mollified and abated their courage that they forgot their former fierceness. Spenser.

As fiddlers fill,
Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will Thrust one more jig upon you. Donne.
Poverty shall know that you dare, in these jig given times, to countenance a legitimate poem. B. n. Johnson.

All the twains that there abide,
With jigs and rural dance replete. Milton.
The muses blith'd to see their friends exalting
Those elegant delights of jigs and vaulting. Fenton.
They wrote to her friends in the country, that she should dance a jig next October in Westminster hall. Arbutnot.

Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus reigns,
Joys in my jigs, and dances in my chains. Pope.
To Jig. v. n. [from the noun.] To dance carelessly; to dance.
Expressed in contempt.

As for the jigging part and figures of dances, I count that little. Locke.

JIG-MAKER. n. f. [Jig and make.] One who dances or plays merrily.

Your only jig-maker! what should a man do but be merry?
Shakespeare.

JIGGUMBO. n. f. [A cant word.] A trinket; a knick knack; a slight contrivance in machinery.

He rifled all his pokes and fobs
Of gimcracks, whims, and jigumbos. Hudibras.

JILT. n. f. [gilia, Ilindick, to intrap in an amour. Mr. Lye. Perhaps from giglot, by contraction; or gillet, or gillat, the diminutive of gilt, the ludicrous name for a woman. 'Tis also called gilit in Scotland.]

1. A woman who gives her lover hopes, and deceives him.
Avoid both courts and camps,
Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools. Orway.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.
When love was all an easy monarch's care,
Jilt rul'd the state, and statemen farces writ. Pope.

To Jilt. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick a man by flattering his love with hopes, and then leaving him for another.

Tell who loves who;
And who is jilted for another's sake. Dryden.

Tell a man passionately in love, that he is jilted; bring a score of witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and it is ten to one but three kind words of hers shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

She might have learn'd to cuckold, jilt and sham,
Had Covent-garden been at Surinam. Congreve.

To JINGLE. v. n. [A word made from jongle, or copied from the found intended to be expressed.] To clink; to found correspondently.

What should the wars do with these jingling fools? Shak.
With noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
We were awak'd. Shakespeare.

You ne'er with jingling words deceive the ear;
And yet on humble subjects great appear. Smith.

What crowds of thee, impetuously bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old! Pope.

JINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Correspondent sounds.
Vulgar judges are nine parts in ten of all nations, who call conceits and jingles wit. Dryden.

2. Any thing founding; a rattle; a bell.
If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly. Bacon.

ILL. n. f. [corrupted from aïlle, French.] A walk or alley in a church or public building. Properly aile.

Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
And arches widen, and long illes extend. Pope.

ILL. n. f. [aïlle, French.] An ear of corn. Answorth.

PLEUS. n. f. [Latin.]

The consequences of inflammation is an ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts; but is really either a convulsion, or inflexion of one part of the gut within the other. Antiquat.

FLEX. n. f. [Latin.]

The ilex, or great scarlet oak, thrives well in England, is a hardy sort of tree, and easily raised of acorns. The Spaniards have a fort they call enzina; the wood of which, when old, is finely chamebled, as if it were painted, and is used for stocks of tools, mallet-heads, chairs, axle-trees, wheels, beetles, pins, and palliades for fortifications, being very hard and durable.

ILIAC. adj. [iliacus, Latin.] Relating to the lower bowels.

The iliac passion is a kind of convulsion in the belly. Those who die of the iliac passion have their bellies much swelled.

ILIAC Passion. n. f. A kind of nervous choick, whose seat is the illum, whereby that gut is twisted, or one part enters the cavity of the part immediately below or above; whence it is also called the volvulus, from volvo, to roll.

ILK. adv. [scalc, Saxon.] Eke; also. It is still retained in Scotland, and denotes each; as, ilk one of you, every one of you. It also signifies the same; as, Mammoth of this ilk, denotes a gentleman whose surname and the title of his place are the same.

Shepherds, should it not yfrend
Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verse
Of Rosalind, who knows not Rosalind,
That Colin made? ilk can I rehearse. Spence.

ILL. adj. [contracted from Evil, and retaining all its sense.]

1. Bad in any respect; contrary to good, whether physical or moral; evil. See EVIL.

Some of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company to be sad and ill-disposed: others of a jovial nature, dispose them to be merry.

2. Sick; disordered; not in health. I know not that ill was used in this sense.

You with me health in very happy season;
For I am on the sudden something ill. Shakespeare.

I have known two towns of the greatest consequence laid by the governours falling ill in the time of the plague. Tempe.

ILL. n. f.

1. Wickedness.

Ill to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath moral motion strongest in continuance.

Young men to imitate all ills are prone;
But are compell'd to avarice alone:
For then in virtue's shape they follow vice. Dryden.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles ill,
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden.

2. Misfortune; misery.

Who can all sense of others ill escape,
Is but a brute at best in human shape.

Though plung'd in ills, and exercis'd in care,
Yet never let the noble mind despair;
When press'd by dangers, and beset with foes,
The gods their timely succour interpose;
And when our virtue links, o'erwhelm'd with grief,
By unforeseen expedients bring relief. A. Pope.

ILL. adv.

1. Not well; not rightly in any respect.

Ill at ease, both she and all her train
The scorching fun had borne, and bearing rain. Dryden.

2. Not easily.

Thou desir'st
The punishment all on thyself! alas!
Bear thine own first; ill able to sustain
His full wrath, whose thou feel'st as yet least part, Milton.

And my displeasure bear't ill.
Ill bears the sex a youthful lover's fate,
When just approaching to the nuptial state. Dryden.

ILL, substantive or adverb, is used in composition to express any bad quality or condition, which may be easily understood by the following examples.

Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies,
Who, threatening cruel death, constrain'd the bride
To wing from me and tell to them by secret. Milton.
A spy distinguishing him from his airy stand,
To bribe whole vigilance, Ægisthus told
A mighty sum of ill persuading gold. Pope.

ILL. advrb.
There founded an ill according cry of the enemies, and a lamentable noise was carried abroad. Wisd.

My colleague,
Being so ill affected with the gout,
Will not be able to be there in person. Ben. Johnson.
The danger of the day's but newly gone,
And the examples
Of every minute's infance, present now,
Have put us in the ill beseeching arms. Shaksf.
Lead back thy Saxons to their ancient Elbe:
I would restore the fruitful Kent, the gift
Of Vortigern, or Hengist's ill bought aid. Dryden.

We simple toasters take delight
To see our women's teeth look white;
And ev'ry faucy ill bred fellow
Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow. Prior.
The ungrateful treason of her ill chosen husband overthrows her. Sidney.

Envy, how carefully does it look? How meagre and ill complexioned? It preys upon itself, and exhausts the spirits.
Collier on Envy.

There grows,
In my most ill compos'd affection, such
A fleshless avarice, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shaksf.

To what end this ill concerted lye,
Palpable and gross? Dryden.
Our generals at present are such as are likely to make the best use of their numbers, without throwing them away on any ill concerted projects. Addison.

The second daughter was a peevish, froward, ill conditioned creature as ever was. Arbutnot.

No Persian arras hides his homely walls
With antick vests, which, through their shady fold,
Betray the streaks of ill dissembled gold. Dryden.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most stiff-mothers,
I'll cy'd unto you. Shakspeare.

I see thy sister's tears,
Thy father's anguish, and thy brother's death,
In the pursuit of our ill fated loves. Addison.

Others ill fated are condemn'd to toil
Their tedious life. Prior.

Plain and rough nature, left to itself, is much better than an artificial ungratefulness, and such studied ways of being ill fashioned. Locke.

Much better, when I find virtue in a fair lodging, than when I am bound to seek it in an ill favoured creature, like a pearl in a dunghill. Sidney.

Near to an old ill favoured castle they meant to perform their unknighly errand. Sidney.

O, what a world of vile ill favour'd faults
Look handsome in three hundred pounds a year! Shaksf.
If a man had but an ill favoured nose, the deep thinkers would contrive to impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

I was at her house the hour she appointed.
—And you sped, sir?
—Very ill favour'dly. Shakspeare.

He shook him ill favour'dly for the time, raging through the very bowels of his country, and plundering all wherelo-ever he came. Hewel.

They would not make bold, as every where they do, to destroy ill formed and mis-shaped productions. Locke.

The fabled dragon never guarded more
The golden fleece, than he his ill got fure. Dryden.

Bid him employ his care for these my friends,
And make good use of his ill gotten power,
By shelling'them men much better than himself. Addison.

Ill governing'd passions in a prince's breast,
Hazard his private and the publick rest. Waller.
That knowledge of theirs is very superficial and ill grounded. Dryden.

Ill grounded passions quickly wear away;
What's built upon esteem can ne'er decay. Walfh.
Hither, of ill join'd sons and daughters born,
First from the ancient world these giants came. Milton.
Nor has he erred above once by an ill judged superfluity.
Garrib's Ovid.

led life would have tumbled to destruction, had there not come fity to his defence. Sidney.

The works are weak, the garrison but thin,
Dispirited with frequent overthrows,
Already wavering on their ill mann'd walls. Dryden.

He will not hear me out!
Was ever criminal forbid to plead?
Curb their ill manner'd zeal. Dryden.

These are the products
Of those ill mated marriages thou saw'st,
Where good with bad were match'd. Milton.
It is impossible for the most ill minded, avaritious, or canning clergyman to do the least injustice to the meanest cottager, in any bargain for tythes. Swift.

Soon as th' ill omen'd rumour reach'd his ear,
Who can describe th' amazement in his face!
The eternal law of things must not be altered, to comply with his ill ordered choice. Dryden.

When you expose the scene,
Down the ill organ'd engines fall,
Off fly the vizards. Swift.

For Phthia fix'd is my return;
Better at home my ill paid pains to mourn,
Than from an equal here sustain the publick scorn. Dryden.

There motly images her fancy strike,
Figures ill pair'd, and families unlike. Pope.

Sparta has not to boast of such a woman;
Nor Troy to thank her, for her ill plac'd love. Dryden.

I shall direct you better, a talk for which I take myself not to be ill qualified, because I have had more opportunities than many others to observe what sources the follies of women are derived from. Swift.

Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end; the eating of a well seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end; to which the consideration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new guilt, able to make us swallow an ill relished portion. Locke.

Blushes, ill restrain'd, betray
Her thoughts inventive on the bridal day;
The conscious fire the dawning blush wery'd,
And smiling thus bespoke the blooming maid. Pope.

Behold the fruit of ill rewarded pain:
As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
So many years is the condemn'd by fate. Dryden.

The god inform'd
This ill shap'd body with a daring foul.

Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
There was plenty enough, but the dishes were ill sorted:
whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women; but little of solid meat for men. Dryden.

It does not belong to the priest's office to impose this name in baptism: he may refuse to pronounce the same, if the parents give them ludicrous, filthy, or ill founding names. Ayliff.

Ill spirited Wor'ter, did we not tend grace,
Pardon and terms of love to all of you? Shakspeare.

From thy foolish heart, vain maid, remove
An useless sorrow, and an ill star'd love. Prior.

Ah, why th' ill suiting pastime must I try?
To gloomy care my thoughts alone are free:
Ill the gay sports with troubled hearts agree. Pope.

Holding of ill tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation. Grew.

The maid, with downcast eyes, and mute with grief,
For death unfinish'd, and ill tim'd relief,
Stood sullen to her suit. Dryden.

How should opinions, thus settled, be given up, if there be any suspicion of interest or design, as there never fails to be, where men find themselves ill treated? Locke.

That boldness and spirit which lads get amongst their play-fellows at school, has ordinarily a mixture of rudeness and ill turned confidence; so that these misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shuffling in the world must be unlearned. Locke.

Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense. Shakspeare.

Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Kalrigh.

Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer, Imaginary ills and fancied tortures ? Addison.

IMAGINATION. n. f. [imaginatio, Latin ; imaginatio, French ;
from image.]

1. Fancy, the power of forming ideal pictures ; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds : joined with belief of that which is to come ; joined with memory of that which is past ; and of things present, or as if they were present : for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and attached, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the ad-mirments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.

Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, or sensible ; if absent, imagination : when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea. Gomarus.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The light of this horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold !
For dire imagination still pursues me.

His imaginings were often as just as they were bold and strong. Atterbury.

Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away. Pope.

2. Conception ; image in the mind ; idea.
Sometimes despair darkens all her imaginings ; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her imaginings. Shakspeare.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil ;
And, for unself imaginings,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shakspeare.

Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be fever'd from my griefs ;
And woes, by wrong imaginings, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakspeare.

We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless ; to which imagination, the idea of space of next kind is. Locke.

3. Contrivance ; scheme.
Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me. Lucan.

IMAGINATIVE. adj. [imaginativus, Fr. from imaginer.] Fanciful ;
full of imagination.

Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they detect which they do not. Bacon.

Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantas-tick part, because our fancy is usually pleased with the containment of shadows and guids. Taylor.

To IMAGINE. v. a. [imaginer, French ; imaginer, Latin.]
1. To fancy ; to paint in the mind.

Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed. Shakspeare.

Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings. Shakspeare.

What are our ideas of eternity and immortality but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition ? Locke.

2. To scheme ; to contrive.
They intended evil against thee, they imagined a millions device. Pope.

IMAGINER. n. f. [from imaginer.] One who forms ideas.
The juggler took upon him to know that such an one dwell point in such a place of a garter that was held up ; and he did it, by first telling the imaginer, and after bidding the other think. Bacon.

IMBECILE. adj. [imbecilis, Latin ; imbecille, French.] Weak ; feeble ; wanting strength of either mind or body.

To IMBECILE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To weaken a flock or history clandestine expences or unjust appropriations.

widows, not suffering their persons to be oppressed, as one states imbecile. Taylor.

IMBECILITY. n. f. [imbecillitas, French.] Weakness ; feebleness of mind or body.

A weak and imperfect rule argueth imbecility and imfection. Bacon.

No imbecility of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein. Bacon.

We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the weak,
and not please ourselves.

That way we are contented to prove, which, being the worst in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of custom imbecility, the fitter and likelier to be brooked. Bacon.

Strength would be lord of imbecility,
And the rude fox would strike his father dead. Shakspeare.

Imbecility, for sex and age, was such as they could see fit up a hand against them. Key-Croft.

When man was fallen, and had abandoned his primitive innocence, a strange imbecility immediately seized and laid hold of him. Watts.

To IMBIBE. v. a. [imbibo, Latin ; imbibere, French.]
1. To drink in ; to draw in.

A pot of alms will receive more hot water than cold, for as much as the warm water imbibes more of the cold. Bacon.

Commissions, perquisites, and bribes. South.

3

Illumi'd wide,

The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the sun.

Thomson.

2. To admit into the mind.

Those, that have imbibed this error, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promises.

Hammond.

It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom.

Locke.

Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and lets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them.

Watts.

3. To drench; to soak. This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in the English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissoluble in water; and this earth, imbued with more acid, becomes a metallick salt.

Newton.

IMBIBER. n. f. [from imbibe.] That which drinks or sucks.

Salts are strong imbibers of sulphureous fumes.

Arbutnot.

IMBIBITION. n. f. [Imbibition, French; from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.

Mist powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the congruity of bodies, which makes a perfect imbibition and incorporation.

Bacon.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but in moisture not; and to all inadequation there is required an imbibition.

Bacon.

A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest; many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected.

Beyl.

TO IMBITTER. v. a. [from bitter.]

1. To make bitter.

2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.

Let them extinguish their passions which imbitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community.

Saunders.

3. To exasperate.

TO IMBODV. v. a. [from body.]

1. To condense to a body.

2. To invest with matter.

An opening cloud reveals

An heav'nly form imbodv'd, and array'd

Dryden.

With robes of light. Though assiduity in the most fix'd cogitation be no trouble to immaterial spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude.

Glanville.

3. To bring together into one mass or company.

I by vow am to embodied yours,

That she which marries you must marry me.

Shakespeare.

Never since created, man Met such imbodv'd force, as nam'd with these, Could merit more than that small infantry

Milton.

I have cafes of buckram for the nose, to immasc it, and outward garments. Shakespeare.

IMMATERIAL. adj. [immaterialis, Fr. in and materia, Latin.]

1. Incorporeal; distinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are spirits immaterial and intellectual, the fire and inhabitants of those sacred palaces, where there is no shadow of light and immortality; no shadow of matter for man, no contentments, grief, and uncomfortable passions to assuage upon; but all joy, tranquillity, and peace, even to ever and ever, do dwell. Shakespeare.

As then the soul a substance hath alone,
Besides the body, in which she is contain'd;

So hath she not a body of her own,

But is a spirit, and immaterial mind. Bacon.

Those immaterial felicities we expect, faggett the stomach of preparing our appetite, without which heaven is no heaven to us. Douglas.

No man that owns the existence of an immaterial spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite spirit; that is, that being as immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Shakespeare.

2. Unimportant; without weight; impertinent; unimportant. This sense has crept into the conversation of the vulgar; but ought to be utterly rejected.

IMMATERIALITY. n. f. [from immaterial.] Immortality; distinctness from body or matter.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Bacon.

IMMATERIALLY. adv. [from immaterial.] In a manner depending upon matter.

The visible species of things strike not our sense immaterially; but streaming in copious rays, do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they pass. Shakespeare.

IMMATERIALIZED. adj. [from in and materia, Latin.] Distinct from matter; incorporeal.

Through assiduity in the most fixed cogitation he is brought to immaterialized spirits, yet it is more than our imagination can bear without lassitude. Bacon.

IMMATERIALNESS. n. f. [from immaterial.] Distinctness from matter.

IMMATERIAL. adj. [in and materia, Latin.] Not consisting of matter; incorporeal; without body.

It is a virtue which may be called immaterial and immaterial, whereof there be in nature but few. Bacon.

After a long enquiry of things immaterial in mind, I propose some object which is immaterial, or left immaterial, and as this of founts. Bacon.

IMMATURE. adj. [immaturus, Latin.]

1. Not ripe.

2. Not perfect; not arrived at fullness or completion.

The land enterprise of Panama was an ill medical and immature counsel; for it was grounded upon a false account, that the passages were no better furnished than that had been them. Bacon.

This is your time for action and debate,
For partial favour, and permitted hate;
Let now your immature discussion cease,
Sit quiet. Dryden.

3. Hasty; early; come to pass before the natural time.

We are pleased, and call not that death immature, if men lives 'till seventy. Shakespeare.

Churches reared up to an height immature, and almost before had given them. Shakespeare.

I M M

From the shore

They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss,
Outragious as a sea, dark, waste, full, wild. Milton.

Immeasurable strength they might behold
In me, of wisdom nothing more than mean. Milton.

What a glorious show are those beings entertained with,
that can see such tremendous objects wandering through those immeasurable depths of ether! Addison.

Not friends are there, nor vessels to convey,
Nor oars to cut th' immense way. Pope.
IMMENSURABLE. adv. [from immensus.] Immensely;
beyond all measure.

The Spaniards immensurably bewail their dead. Spenser.
There ye shall be fed, and fill'd

Immensurably; all things shall be your prey. Milton.
IMMECHANICAL. adj. [in and mechanical.] Not according to the laws of mechanics.

We have nothing to do to show any thing that is immechanical, or not according to the established laws of nature. Chyren.
IMMEDIATE. n. f. [immédiat, French; from immediatus.]
Personal greatness; power of acting without dependence. This is a harsh word, and sense peculiar I believe to Shakspeare.

He led our pow'rs,
Bore the commission of my place and person;
The which immediacy may well stand up,
And call itself your brother. Shakspeare.

IMMEDIATE. adj. [immédiat, French; in and medius, Latin.]
1. Being in such a state with respect to something else as that there is nothing between them; proximate; with nothing intervening.

Moses mentions the immediate causes, the rains and the waters; and St. Peter mentions the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens. Burnet.
2. Not acting by second causes.

It is much to be ascribed to the immediate will of God, who gives and taketh away beauty at his pleasure. Alsted.
3. Instant; present with regard to time: Prior therefore should not have written more immediate.

Immediate are my needs, and my relief
Must not be toft and turn'd to me in words,
But find supply immediate. Shakspeare.

Death denounc'd that day,
Which he presumes already vain, and void,
Because not yet inflicted, as he fear'd,
By some immediate stroke. Milton.

But flie, how'er of vict'ry sure,
Contentns the wreath too long delay'd;
And arm'd with more immediate pow'r,
Calls cruel silence to her aid. Prior.

IMMEDIATELY. adv. [from immediatus.]
1. Without the intervention of any other cause or event.
God's acceptance of it, either immediately by himself, or mediately by the hands of the bishop, is that which vests
the whole property of a thing in God. South.

2. Instantly; at the time present; without delay.
Her father hath commanded her to slip
Away with slender, and with him at Eaton Immediately to marry. Shakspeare.

Rauk and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton.

IMMEMORABLE. adj. [inmemorabilis, Latin.] Not worth remembering.

IMMEMORIAL. adj. [inmemorialis, French; in and memoria, Latin.] Past time of memory; so ancient that the beginning cannot be traced.

By a long immemorial practice, and prescription of an aged thorough-paced hypocrisy, they come to believe that for a reality, which, at first practice of it, they themselves knew to be a cheat. South.

All the laws of this kingdom have some memorials in writing, yet all have not their original in writing; for some obtained their force by immemorial usage or custom. Har.

IMMENSE. adj. [immensus, Fr. immensus, Lat.] Unlimited;
unbounded; infinite.

O goodness infinite! goodness immense!
That all this good of evil shall produce! Milton.
As infinite duration hath no relation unto motion and time, so infinite or immense effluence hath no relation unto body; but is a thing distinct from all corporeal magnitude, which we mean when we speak of immensity, and of God as of an im- immense being. Grew.

IMMENSELY. adv. [from immensus.] Infinitely; without measure.

We shall find that the void space of our system is immensely bigger than all its corporeal parts. Bentley.

I M M

IMMENSITY. n. f. [immensité, French.] Unbounded greatness;
infinity.

By the power we find in ourselves of repeating, as often as we will, any idea of space, we get the idea of immensity. Locke.

He that will consider the immensity of this fabric, and the great variety that is to be found in this considerable part of it which he has to do with, may think that in other mansions of it there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke.

All these illustrious worlds,
And millions which the glass can ne'er descry,
Lost in the wilds of vast immensity,
Are fun, are centers. Blackmore.

passion, reason and my own immerit tell me it must not be for me. Swickling.

IMMERSE. adj. [immerfus, Latin.] Buried; covered; sunk deep.

After long enquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immaterial, or less material; such as that of sounds, that the intellect may become not partial. Bar.

To immerse. v. a. [immergo, Latin.]
1. To put under water.
2. To sink or cover deep.

He flood
More than a mile immerse'd within the wood;
At once the wind was laid. Dryden.

They observed that they were immerse'd in their rocks, quarries, and mines, in the same manner as they are at this day found in all known parts of the world. Woodward.

3. To keep in a state of intellectual depression.
It is a melancholy reflection, that our country, which, in times of popery, was called the nation of saints, should now have less appearance of religion in it than any other neighbouring state or kingdom; whether they be such as continue still immerse'd in the errors of the church of Rome, or such as are recovered out of them. Addison.

We are prone to engage ourselves with the business, the pleasures, and the amusements of this world: we give ourselves up too greedily to the pursuit, and immerse ourselves too deeply in the enjoyment of them. Atterbury.

It is impossible for a man to have a lively hope in another life, and yet be deeply immerse'd in the enjoyment of this.

IMMERSION. n. f. [immersio, Latin; in and immersio, French.]
1. The act of putting any body into a fluid below the surface.

Achilles's mother is said to have dipped him, when he was a child, in the river Styx, which made him invulnerable all over, excepting that part which the mother held in her hand during this immersion. Addison.

2. The state of sinking below the surface of a fluid.
3. The state of being overwhelmed or lost in any respect.

There are many persons, who, through the heat of their lusts and passions, through the contagion of ill example, or too deep an immersion in the affairs of life, (swerve from the rules of their holy faith; and yet would, upon extraordinary warning, be brought to comply with them. Atterbury.

IMMETHODICAL. adj. [in and methodical.] Confused; being without regularity; being without method.

Mr. Bayle compares the answering of an immethodical author to the hunting of a duck: when you have him full in your sight he gives you the slip, and becomes invisible. Addison.

IMMETHODICALLY. adv. [from immethodical.] Without method.

IMMINENCE. n. f. [from imminens.] Any ill impending; immediate or near danger. A word not in use.

I do not (speak of flight, of fear, of death;
But dare all imminence, that gods and men
Address their dangers in. Shakspeare.

IMMINENT. adj. [imminens, Fr. imminens, Lat.] Impending; at hand; threatening. Always in an ill sense.

What dangers at any time are imminent, what evils hang over our heads, God doth know, and not we. Hester.

Three times to-day
You have defended me from imminent death. Shakspeare.

These he applies for warnings and portents
Of evils imminent; and on her knee
Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day. Shakspeare.

To them preach'd
Conversion and repentance, as to souls
In prison, under judgments imminent. Milton.

Men would not fail without imminent danger and inconveniences. Pope.
To immergle. v. a. [in and mingere.] To mingle; to mix;
to unite. Some

Some of us, like thee, through stormy life
Toil'd, tempest-beaten, ere we could attain
This holy calm, this harmony of mind,
Where purity and peace in mingle charms.

Thompson.

IMMINUTION. n. f. [from imminuere, Latin.] Diminution; decrease.

These revolutions are as exactly uniform as the earth's are, which could not be, were there any place for chance, and did not a providence continually oversee and secure them from all alteration or imminution.

IMPULSE. n. f. [impulsus, Latin.]

1. Communicated force; the effect of one body acting upon another,

If these little impulses set the great wheels of devotion on work, the largeness and height of that shall not at all be prejudiced by the smallness of its occasion. South.

Bodies produce ideas in us manifestly by impulse. Lacks.

Bodies, from the impulse of a fluid, can only gravitate in proportion to their surfaces, and not according to their quantity of matter, which is contrary to experience. Coryn.

2. Influence acting upon the mind; motive; idea.

Mean time, by Jove's impulse, Mezentius arm'd, Dryden.

Succeeded Turnus.

These were my natural impulses for the undertaking; but there was an accidental motive, which was full as forcible. Dry.

Moses saw the bush burnt without being consumed, and heard a voice out of it: this was something, besides finding an impulse upon his mind to go to Pharaoh, that he might bring his brethren out of Egypt. Lacks.

3. Holistic impression.

Like two great rocks against the raging side,

Unmov'd the two united chiefs abide,

Sustain th' impulse, and receive the war. Prior.

IMPULSION. n. f. [impulsio, Fr. impulsion, Latin.]

1. The agency of body in motion upon body.

The motion in the minute parts of any solid body passeth without found; for that found that is heard sometimes is produced only by the breaking of the air, and not by the impulsion of the air. Bacon.

To the impulsion there is requisite the force of the body that moveth, and the resistance of the body that is moved; and if the body be too great, it yieldeth too little; and if it be too small, it resisteth too little. Bacon.

2. Influence operating upon the mind.

But thou didst plead

Divine impulsion, prompting how thou might'st

Find some occasion to infect our foes. Milton.

IMPUISIVE. adj. [impulsivus, Fr. from impulse.] Having the power of impulse; moving; impellent.

Nature and duty bind him to obedience;

But those being placed in a lower sphere,

His fierce ambition, like the highest mover,

Has hurried with a strong impulsive motion

Against their proper course. Denham.

What is the fountain or impulsive cause of this prevention of sin? It is perfectly free grace. South.

Poor men! poor parents! we and they

Do some impulsive force obey,

And are but play'd with, do not play. Prior.

IMPUNITY. n. f. [impunitas, Fr. impunitas, Latin.] Freedom from punishment; exemption from punishment.

In the condition of subjects they will gladly continue, as long as they may be protected and justly governed, without oppression on the one side, or impunity on the other. Davies.

A general impunity would confirm them; for the vulgar may never be brought to believe that there is a crime where they see no punishment. Addison.

Men, potent in the commonwealth, will employ their ill-gotten influence towards procuring impunity, or extorting undue favours for themselves or dependents. Asterbury.

IMPURE. adj. [impur, Fr. impurus, Latin.]

1. Contrary to sanctity; unhalloved; unholly.

No more can impure man retain and move

In that pure region of a worthy love,

Than earthly substance can unford'd aspire,

And leave his nature to converse with fire. Denne.

Hypocrites audaciously talk,

Condemning as impure what God has made

Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton.

2. Unchaste.

5. Into any place.

Is it not more eligible to come in with a smooth gale, than to be tossed at sea with a storm? Chilier.

Next fill the hole with its own earth again,

And trample with thy feet, and tread it in. Dryden.

6. Close; home.

The posture of left-handed fencers is so different from that of the right-handed, that you run upon their swords if you push forward; and they are in with you, if you offer to fall back without keeping your guard. Tatler.

In has commonly in computation a negative or privative sense, as in the Latin; in, active denotes that which acts, inactive that which does not act. In before r is changed into r; as irregular: before l into l; as illative: and into m before some other consonants; as improbable.

INABILITY. n. f. [in and ability.] Impuissance; impotence; want of power.

If no natural nor casual inability cross their desires, they always delight to insure themselves with actions most beneficial to others, cannot but gather great experience, and thro' experience the more wisdom. Hooker.

Neither ignorance nor inability can be pretended; and what plea can we offer to divine justice to prevent condemnation?

INABISTENCE. n. f. [in and abstinence.] Intemperance; want of power to abstain.

Dikafs dire; of which a monstrous crew

Before thee shall appear, that thou may'st know

What misery the inabstinence of Eve

Shall bring on man. Milton.

INACCESSIBLE. adj. [inaccessibile, Fr. in and accessibile.] Not to be reached; not to be approached.

Whatever you are,

That in this desert inaccessibile,

Under the shade of melancholy boughs,

Loose and neglected the creeping hours of time.

Many other hidden parts of nature, even of a far lower form, are inaccessibile to us. Shakspeare.

There shall we clearly fee the ends and uses of these things, which here were either too subtle for us to penetrate, or too remote and inaccessibile for us to come to any distinct view of.

Ray on the Great one.

This part, which is so noble, is not altogether inaccessibile; and that an easy way may be found to it, 'tis to consider nature and to copy her. Dryden.

INACCURACY. n. f. [from inaccurate.] Want of exactness.

INACCURATE. adj. [in and accurate.] Not exact; not accurate.

It is used sometimes of persons, but more frequently of performances.

INACTION. n. f. [inaction, Fr. in and action.] Cessation from labour; torpor; want of labour.

The times and amusements past are not more like a dream to me, than those which are present: I lie in a refreshing kind of inaction. Pope.

INACTIVE. adj. [in and active.] Not busy; not diligent; idle; indolent; sluggish.

INACTIVELY. adv. [from inactive.] Lolly; without labour; without motion; sluggishly.

In seasons of perfect freedom, mark how your son spends his time; whether he inactively loiters it away, when left to his own inclination. Locke.

INACTIVITY. n. f. [in and activity.] Idleness; rest; sluggishness.

A doctrine which manifestly tends to discourage the endeavours of men, to introduce a lazy inactivity, and neglect of the ordinary means of grace. Rogers.

Virtue, conceal'd within our breast,

Is inactivity at best. Swift.

INADEQUATE. adj. [in and adequatus, Latin.] Not equal to the purpose; defective; falling below the due proportion.

Remember for vice

Not paid, or paid inadequate in price,

What farther means can reason now direct? Dryden.

Inadequate ideas are such, which are but a partial or incomplete representation of those archetypes to which they are referred. Locke.

INADEQUATELY. adv. [from inadequate.] Defectively; not completely.

Thic pores they may either exactly fill, or but inadequately. Boyle.

INADVERTENCE. n. f. [inadvertence, French; from inadvertentia.] Carelessness; negligence; inattention.

1. Carelessness; negligence; inattention.

There is a vast difference between them; indeed, as vast as between inadvertent and deliberation, between surprise and set purpose. South.

From an habitual heedless inadvertency, men are so intent upon the present that they mind nothing else. L'Esrange.

2. Act or effect of negligence.

Many persons have lain under great and heavy scandals, which have taken their ill title only from some inadvertence or indiscretion. Government of the Tongue.

The productions of a great genius, with many lapses and INARABLE. adj. [in and are, Latin.] Not capable of tillage. Dicit.

TEINARCH. v. a. [in and arch.]

Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and, having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one side about three inches in length: after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it, so that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock; you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from knocking them asunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother-tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmynes, walnuts, firs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding. Mader.

INARTICULATE. adj. [inart. pl., Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with distinctness like that of the syllables of human speech.

Observe what inarticulate sounds resemble any of the particular letters. Wils. in.

INAUSPICIOUS. adj. [in and auspicious.] Ill-omened; unlucky; unfortunate.

Oh here
I will set up my everlasting rest;
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-weary'd self. Shakspeare.

Though heaven's inauspicious eye
Lay black on love's nativity,
Her eye a strong appeal can give;
Beams, smiles, and love shall live.
The stars feel not the diseases their inauspicious influence produces. Boyle.

With inauspicious love a wretched swain
Pursu'd the fairest nymph of all the plain;
She plung'd him hopeless in a deep despair. Dryden.

INBEING. n. f. [in and being.] Inherence; inseparableness.

When we say the bowl is round, the boy is witty, these are proper or inherent modes; for they have a fort of inbeing in the substance itself, and do not arise from the addition of any other substance to it. Watts.

INBORN. adj. [in and born.] Innate; implanted by nature.

Led by sense of good,
Inborn to all, I sought my useful food. Dryden.

All passions being inborn with us, we are almost equally judges of them. Dryden.

Some Carolans, to heaven's dictates true,
Thy inborn worth with conscious eyes shall see,
And slight th' imperial diadem for thee. Aldrich.

INBREATHED. adj. [in and breath.] Inspired; infused by inspiration.

Blest pair of tyrans, pledges of heav'n's joy,

I treat either purposely or incidentally of colour. Hume.

INCIDENTALLY. adv. [from incident.] Occasionally; by the way.

It was incidentally moved amongst the judges what should be done for the king himself, who was attacked; but related that the crown takes away defects. Bacon's History VII.

TO INCINERATE. v.a. [in and cinere, Latin.] To burn to ashes.

By baking, without melting, the heat incinere, and maketh fragile; and lastly, it duth incinere and culture. Bacon's Natural History.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then hot and brittle, and lastly broken and incinere. Hume.

These drops flick in the capillary inferior of the blood, and are soon incinere and calcined into such salts as produce coughs. Hume's Essays.

INCINERATION. n.f. [incineration, Fr. from incinere, Latin.] Act of burning anything to ashes.

I observed in the first salt of urine, brought by distillation very white, a taste not unlike common salt, and on being from the caustic lixiviate taste of other salts was appearing. Hume's Essays.

INCINERATION. n.f. [in and circumfession.] Was a caution; want of heed.

An unexpected way of delusion, whereby he must cut away the incinere of their belief. Hume.

INCISED. adj. [incise, Fr. in and scindere, Latin.] Cut; cut by cutting; as, an incised wound.

I brought the incised lips together. Hume's Essays.

INCISION. n.f. [incision, Fr. incise, Latin.]

1. A cut; a wound made with a sharp instrument. Generally used for wounds made by a chirurgion.

Let us make incision for your love.

To prove whose blood is reddest, let or mine incision. Shakspeare, King Lear.

God help thee, shallow man: God make reason in thee, thou art raw.

The reception of one is as different from the incision of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incision of the plough, and when it opens to crink in the incision of the restraints of a flower. Hume's Essays.

A small incision knife is more handy than a larger one opening the bag.

2. Division of viscidities by medicines.

Absterision is a scouring off, or in incision of the most elastic humours, and making them more fluid, and cutting; between them and the parts; as is found in nitrous water, which is used to cleanse the linen cloth. Hume's Essays.

INCISIVE. adj. [incise, Fr. from incise, Latin.] Having quality of cutting; or dividing.

The colour of many compounds will cohere by being incised together, and be destroyed by the effusion of water, or by incising and incising liquors. Hume's Essays.

INCISOR. n. f. [incisus, Latin.] Cutter; tooth in the forepart of the mouth.

INCISORY. adj. [incisive, French.] Having the quality of cutting.

INCISURE. n. f. [incisura, Latin.] A cut; an aperture.

In some creatures it is wide, in some narrow, in some with a deep incisure up into the head, for the better catching and holding of prey, and more easy comminuting of hard food.

Derham.

INCITATION. n. f. [incitatio, Latin.] Incitement; incentive; motive; impulse.

Dr. Ridley, in his tract of magnetical bodies, defines magnetical attraction to be a natural incitation and disposition conforming unto contiguity, an union of one magnetical body unto another.

The multitude of objects do proportionally multiply both the possibilities and incitations.

Governor, of the Tongue.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to act with the utmost impetuosity. Dewey of Piety.

TO INCITE. v. a. [incito, Lat. inciter, Fr.] To stir up; to pull forward in a purpose; to animate; to spur; to urge on.

How many now in health

Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to? Shakspeare.

No blown ambition doth our arms incite;

But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right. Shakspeare.

Antiochus, when he incited Prusias to join in war, set before him the greatness of the Romans, comparing it to a fire, that took and spread from kingdom to kingdom. Bacon.

The principles of nature and common reason, in all difficulties, where prudence or courage are required, do rather incite us to fly for assistance to a single person than a multitude. Swift.

INCITEMENT. n. f. [from incite.] Motive; incentive; impulse; inciting power.

A marvel it were, if a man of great capacity, having such incitements to make him desirous of all furtherances unto his cause, could espy in the whole scripture of God nothing which might breed at the least a probable opinion of likelihood, that divine authority was the same way incitable. Hooker.

A person sent hither by some good providence, to be the occasion and incitement of great good to this island. Milton.

If thou must reform the stubborn times,

From the long records of distant age
Derive incitements to renew thy rage. Pope.

INCIVIL. adj. [incivilis, Fr.] Unpolished. See UNCIVIL.

INCIVILITY. n. f. [incivilitas, Fr. in and civility.]

1. Want of courtesy; rudeness.

He does offend against that reverence which is due to the common apprehensions of mankind, whether true or not, which is the greatest incivility. Tillotson.

2. Affect of rudeness.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, uncomely jests, loud talking and jeering, which, in civil account, are called indecencies and incivilities. Taylor.

INCIVILITY. n. f. [incivilitas, Fr. inclementia, Latin.] Unmercifulness; cruelty; severity; harshness; roughness.

And though by tempests of the prize beverts,
In heaven's incivility some ease we find;

Our foes we vanquish'd by our valour left. Dryden.

INCLEMENT. adj. [in and clement, Latin.] Unmerciful; un-pitiful; void of tenderness; harsh.

Teach us further by what means to shun
Th' inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail and snow. Milton.

I stand

Naked, defenceless, on a foreign land:
Propitious to my wants, a vail supply,
To guard the wretched from th' inclement sky. Pope.

INCILABLE. adj. [incivilis, Latin.]

1. Having a propension of will; favourably disposed; willing; tending by disposition.

People are not always incilable to the belt. Spenser.

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could espy in the whole scripture nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way incilable. Hooker.

The gall and bitterness of certain mean writings, who spared him little, made him, for their sakes, the less incilable to that truth which he himself should have honoured. Hooker.

Defuse,

Inclilable now grown to touch or taste,
Solicited her longing eye. Milton.

2. Having a tendency.

If such a craft naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclilable to fall this thousand years than the last; but if the craft was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally. Bentley.

INCLINATION. n. f. [inclinaison, French, inclination, Latin.]

1. Tendency towards any point.

The two rays, being equally refracted, have the same inclination to one another after refraction which they had before; that is, the inclination of half a degree answering to the sun's diameter. Newton.

N° LXXIV.

2. Nature's aptness.

Though most of the thick woods are grubbed up since the promontory has been cultivated, there are still many spots of it which shew the natural inclination of the soil leans that way. Addison.

3. Propension of mind; favourable disposition; incipient desire. The king was wonderfully disquieted, when he found that the prince was totally alienated from all thoughts of or inclination to the marriage. Clarendon.

A mere inclination to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet, in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for such: for otherwise how should they so often plead and rest in the honest and well-inclined disposition of their minds, when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of the law? South.

4. Love; affection. We have had few knowing painters, because of the little inclination which princes have for painting. Dryden.

5. Disposition of mind. Bid him

Report the features of Orlavia, her years, Shakspeare.

Her inclination. The tendency of the magnetical needle to the east or west.

6. [In pharmacy.] The act by which a clear liquor is poured off from some feces or sediment by only sloping the vessel, which is also called decantation. Quincy.

INCLINATORY. adj. [from incline.] Having a quality of inclining to one or other.

If that inclinatory virtue be destroyed by a touch from the contrary pole, that end which before was elevated will then decline. Brown.

INCLINATORILY. adv. [from inclinatory.] Obliquely; with inclination to one side or the other; with some deviation from north and south.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinatorily, or somewhat equinoctially, that is, toward the eastern or western points, they discover some verticity. Brown.

TO INCLINE. v. n. [inclino, Latin; incliner, Fr.]

1. To bend; to lean; to tend towards any part.

Her house inclined unto death, and her paths unto the dead. Prov. ii. 18.

Sill to this place

My heart inclines, still hither turn my eyes;
Hither my feet unbidden find their way. Rowe.

2. To be favourably disposed to; to feel desire beginning.

Doth his majesty

Incline to it, or no? — He seems indifferent;

Or rather swaying more upon our part. Shakspeare.

TO INCLINE. v. a.

1. To give a tendency or direction to any place or state.

The timely dew of sleep,

Now falling with soft slumb'rous weight, inclines
Our eyelids. Milton.

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
Now to the baron fate inclines the field. Pope.

A tow'ring structure to the palace join'd;
To this his steps the thoughtful prince inclined. Pope.

2. To turn the desire towards any thing.

3. To bend; to incurvate.

With due respect my body I incline,
As to some being of superior kind,
And made my court. Dryden.

TO INCLIP. v. a. [in and clip.] To grasp; to inclose; to surround.

What'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips,
Is thine, if thou wilt hat. Shakspeare.

TO INCLOISTER. v. a. [in and cloister.] To shut up in a cloister.

TO INCLOUD. v. a. [in and cloud.] To darken; to obscure.

In their thick breath,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be inclu'd,
And forc'd to drink their vapour. Shakspeare.

TO INCLUDE. v. a. [include, Latin.]

1. To inclose; to shut in.

2. To comprise; to comprehend.

This desire being recommended to her majesty, it liked her to include the same within one intire leaf. Bacon.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope.

Instead of enquiring whether he be a man of virtue, the question is only whether he be a whig or a tory; under which terms all good and ill qualities are included. Swift.

INCLUSIVE. adj. [inclusif, French.]

1. Inclosing; encircling.

O, would that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel, to scar me to the brain. Shakspeare.

2. Comprehended in the sum or number; as, from Wednesday to Saturday inclusive; that is, both Wednesday and Saturday taken into the number.

I'll search where ev'ry virtue dwells,
From courts in hives down to cells. Swift.

INCLUSIVELY. adv. [from inclusive.] The thing mentioned reckoned into the account.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively. Holt. All articulation is made within the mouth, from the throat to the lips inclusively; and is differentiated partly by the organs used in it, and partly by the manner and degree of articulating. Hilder.

INCOAGULABLE. adj. [in and coagulable.] Incapable of concretion.

INCOEXISTENCE. n. f. [in and coexistence.] The quality of not existing together; non-allocation of existence.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or incoexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connexion between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on. Locke.

INCOGNITO. adv. [corrupted by mutation from incognitus, Latin.] Unknown; in private.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog,

Depend upon it, he'll remain inco. Addison.

INCOGNITANCY. n. f. [incognitancy, Latin.] Want of thought. One man's fancies are laws to others, who convey them as such to their successors, who afterwards misname all unobscuredness to their incognitancy presumption. Boyle.

Next to the stupid and merely vegetable state of incognitancy, we may rank partial and piece-meal consideration. Frederick of Prussia. INCOGNITIVE. adj. [in and cognitive.] Wanting the power of thought.

Purely material beings, as clippings of our beards, and sensible, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call cognitive and incognitive. Locke.

INCOGNITO. adv. [incognitus, Latin.] In a state of concealment.

'Twas long ago

Since gods came down incognito. Prior.

INCOHERENCE. n. f. [in and coherent.]

INCOHERENCY. n. f. [in and coherent.]

1. Want of connexion; incongruity; inconsequence; want of dependence of one part upon another. I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherence of the argumentations better than syllogisms. Locke.

Incoherence in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handsomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason. Locke.

2. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts. If plaiter be beaten into an impalpable power, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass. Boyle.

INCOHERENT. adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependence of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.

2. Without cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other. Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as previous as those of marble or gravel. Hutton.

INCOHERENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.] Inconsistently; inconsequently.

The character of Eurystochus is the imitation of a person conformed with fears, speaking irrationally and incoherently. Brown.

INCOLOMIY. n. f. [incolumitas, Latin.] Safety; security. A word very little in use.

The parliament is necessary to assert and preserve the national rights of a people, with the incolumity and welfare of a country. Havel.

INCOMBUSTIBILITY. n. f. [from incombustible.] The quality of resisting fire so that it cannot consume.

The stone in the Apennines is remarkable for its shining quality, and the animabus for its incombustibility. Rey.

INCOMBUSTIBLE. adj. [in combustible, Fr. in and combustible.] Not to be consumed by fire.

It agrees in this common quality ascribed unto both, of being incombustible, and not consumable by fire. Wilkins.

INCOMBUSTIBLY. n. f. [from incombustible.] The quality of not being wasted by fire.

INCOME. n. f. [in and came.] Revenue; produce of any thing.

How who repent at the plenty of thy neighbour, and the greatness of his income, consider what are frequently the dismal consequences of all this. South.

No fields afford

So large an income to the village lord.

Dr. Gual has scarce any lands belonging to it, and little or no income; but what arises from its trade: the great support of this little state is its linen manufacture. Dryden.

Notwithstanding the large income annexed to some few of her preferments, this church hath in the whole little to income. Arden.

INCOMMENSURABILITY. n. f. [from incommensurable.] The state of one thing with respect to another, when they cannot be compared by any common measure.

INCOMMENSURABLE. adj. [French; from in, com, and mensurable, Latin.] Not to be reduced to any measure common to both; not to be measured together, such as that the proportion of one to the other can be told.

Our disputations about vacuum or space, incommensurable quantities, the infinite divisibility of matter, and incommensuration, will lead us to see the weakness of our nature. Hales.

INCOMMENSURATE. adj. [in, com, and mensuring, Latin.] Not admitting one common measure.

The diagonal line and side of a quadrangle, which, in incommensuration, are yet commensurable, are yet commensurable to the infinite comprehension of the divine intellect. Boyle.

As all other measures of time are reducible to this first; so we labour to reduce these three, though finally of them is incommensurate to one another, for civil use, making one greater by the less. Hale.

If the year comprehend days, it is but as any great part of time may be said to comprehend a less, though the latter may be incommensurate to the greater. Boyle.

INCOMMUNICABLE. adj. [in, com, and communicable, Latin.]

INCOMMUNICABLE. adj. [Fr.] To be incommunicable; to hinder or embarrass without very great injury.

A gnat, planted upon the horn of a bull, begged the bull's pardon; but rather than incommode ye, say he, I'll move. Ussher.

Although they sometimes molest and incommode the assistants of some parts, yet the agent, when by both the one and the other is effected, is of that indispensable need to the earth and to mankind, that they could not find where to. Boyle.

INCOMMUNICIOUS. adj. [incommunis, Latin.] Incommunicable; vexatious without much chief.

Things of general benefit, for in this world what is so perfect that no inconvenience does ever follow it may be less accident be incommunicable to a few. Hale.

Men's intentions in speaking are to be understood, without frequent explanations and incommunicable interrogations. Locke.

INCOMMUNIOUSLY. adv. [from incommunis.] Incommunicably; not at ease.

INCOMMUNIOUSNESS. n. f. [from incommunis.] Incommunicableness.

Diseases, disorders, and the incommunicableness of external nature, are inconsistent with happiness. Boyle.

INCOMMUNITY. n. f. [incommunis, Fr. incommunis, Latin.] Inconvenience; trouble.

Declare your opinion, which is already you have consented to be in the common law, which I would have thought and free from all such dislike. Boyle.

If iron can be incorporated with flint or flint, without great charge, or other incommunis, the charges that make the compound stuff profitable. Locke.

By considering the reason and the manner, the right and the rooms which it is not need fire, that is to say, the fear the incommunis of flint. Boyle.

INCOMMUNICABILITY. n. f. [from incommunicable.] The quality of not being incommunicable.

INCOMMUNICABLE. adj. [in, communis, Fr. and communis.] 1. Not impartible; not to be made the common right, property or quality of more than one.

They cannot ask more than I can give, may I have to myself the incommunicable jewel of my conscience. Boyle.

Only the God of nature perfectly knows her, and life without darkness is the incommunicable claim of him that holds in light inaccessible. Boyle.

It was agreed on both sides, that there was one incommunicable excellency, which was incommunicable to any creature. Boyle.

2. Not to be expelled; not to be told.

Neither did he treat them with these speculations of love in the extraordinary discoveries of the good only, but also of those incommunicable revelations of the divine love, in reference to their own personal interest in it. South.

INCOMMUNICABLY. adv. [from incommunicable.] Incommunicably; not to be imparted or communicated.

To annihilate is both in reason, and by the custom of do vines, as incommunicable the effect of a power divine, and above nature, as is creation itself. Hales.

INCOMMUNICATING. adj. [in and communicating.] Having no intercourse with each other.

The judgments and administrations of common justice carry a consanguinity one to another, whereby both are preserved from that confusion that would ensue, if the administration was by several incommunicating hands, or by provincial administrations. Boyle.

INCOMPACT. adj. [in and compact.] Not joined; not

INCOMPACTED. adj. [in and compact.] Not joined; not compacted.

Salt, say they, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compact.

compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended, but would remain incomplete.

Boyle.

INCOMPARABLE, adj. [incomparable, Fr. in and comparable.] Excellent above compare; excellent beyond all competition.

My heart would not suffer me to omit any occasion, whereby I might make the incomparable Pamela see how much extraordinary devotion I bore to her service. Sidney.

A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were

To an untirable and continuant goodness. Shakespeare.

Her words do show her wit incomparable. Shakespeare.

Now this mark

Was cried incomparable, and th' ensuing night

Made it a fool and beggar. Shakespeare.

If I could leave this argument of your incomparable beauty, I might turn to one which would equally oppress me with its greatness. Dryden.

INCOMPARABLY, adv. [from incomparable.]

1. Beyond comparison; without competition.

A founder it had, whom I think incomparably the wisest man that ever the French church did enjoy, since the hour it enjoyed him. Holier.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily to undergo any less evil, to free himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South.

2. Excellently; to the highest degree. A low phrase.

There are the heads of Antoninus Pius, the Paulina's, and Marcus Aurelius, all incomparably well cut. Addison.

INCOMPARISONATE, adj. [in and comparisonate.] Void of pity; void of tenderness.

INCOMPARABILITY, n. f. [properly incomparability, in and comparate, Latin.] Inconfinity of one thing with another.

He overcame that natural incomparability, which hath been noted between the vulgar and the sovereign favour. Watson.

The reason of the stress rests not upon the incomparability of excess of one infinitude above another, either in intention or extension; but the incomparability of any multitude to be infinite. Hale.

INCOMPARABLE, adj. [incomparable, French; rather incomptible, as it is sometimes written; in and compta, Lat.] Inconsistent with something else; such as cannot subsist or cannot be possessed together with something else.

Fortune and love have ever been incomparable, that it is no wonder, madam, if, having had so much of the one for you, I have ever found so little of the other for myself. Suckl.

May not the outward expressions of love in many good Christians be greater to some other object than to God? Or is this incomparable with the sincerity of the love of God? Hamm.

The repugnancy of infinitude is equally incomparable to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of things successive with infinitude. Hale.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incomparable, by mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

Sense I have proved to be incomparable with mere bodies, even those of the most compound and elaborate textures. Bent.

INCOMPARIBLY, adv. [for incomparably, from incomparabile.] Inconsistently.

INCOMPETENCY, n. f. [in and competence, Fr. from incompetent.]

Inability; want of adequate ability or qualification.

Our not being able to discern the moving of a shadow of a dial-plate, or that of the index upon a clock, ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern some motions of natural bodies incomparably slower than these. Boyle.

INCOMPETENT, adj. [in and competent.] Not suitable; not adequate; not proportionate. In the civil law it denotes some defect of right to do any thing.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of hatred to his brethren, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretexes, the one of attainer, the other of illegitimation. Bacon.

Every speck does not blind a man, nor does every infirmity make one unable to discern, or incompetent to reprove the grosser faults of others. Government of the Tongue.

I thank you for the commission you have given me: how I have acquitted myself of it, must be left to the opinion of the world, in spite of any prostration which I can enter against the present age, as incompetent or corrupt judges. Dryden.

Laymen, with equal advantages of parts, are not the most incompetent judges of facted things. Dryden.

An equal attraction on all sides of all matter, is just equal to no attraction at all; and by this means all the motion in the universe must proceed from external impulse alone, which is an incompetent cause for the formation of a world. Beattie.

INCOMPETENTLY, adv. [from incompetent.] Unfitly; unduly.

INCOMPLETE, adj. [in and complete.] Not perfect; not finished.

It pleases him in mercy to account himself incomplete and maimed without us. Holier.

In incomplete ideas we are apt to impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others, especially where they have particular and familiar names. Locke.

INCOMPLETENESS, n. f. [from incomplete.] Imperfection; unfinished state.

The incompleteness of our seraphick lover's happiness, in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfaction, but of an entire possession. Boyle.

INCOMPLIANCE, n. f. [in and compliance.]

1. Untractableness; impracticableness; contradictory temper.

Self-conceit produces perversities and incompliances of humour in things lawful and indifferent. Tillotson.

Somewhat incomposed they are in their trimming, and extraordinary tender of their young ones. Hawel.

IMPOSSIBILITY, n. f. [from impossibility.] Quality of being not possible but by the negation or destruction of something; inconsistency with something.

The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same fluidities in any modification. Morre.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude, yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that arises from individuals already actually distinguished. Hale.

IMPOSSIBLE, adj. [in, een, and possible.] Not possible together; not possible but by the negation of something else.

IMPREHENSIBILITY, n. f. [from imprehensibilis, Fr. from incomprehensibilis.] Unconceivableness; superiority to human understanding.

IMPREHENSIBLE, adj. [from imprehensibilis, Fr. in and comprehensibilis.]

1. Not to be conceived; not to be fully understood.

His precepts tend to the improving and perfecting the most valuable part of us, and annexing imprehenfible rewards as an eternal weight of glory. Hammond.

One thing more is imprehenfible in this matter. Lo. le.

The laws of vegetation, life, subsistence, and propagation, are the arbitrary pleasures of God, and may vary in manners imprehenfible to our imaginations. Bentley.

2. Not to be contained. Not low used.

Presence every where is the sequel of an infinite and imprehenfible substance; for what can be every where but that which can no where be comprehended? Holier.

IMPREHENSIBLENESS, n. f. [from imprehensibilis.] Unconceivableness.

I might argue from God's imprehenfibility: if we could believe nothing but what we have ideas of, it would be impossible for us to believe God is imprehenfible. Watts.

IMPREHENSIBLY, adv. [from imprehensibilis.] In a manner not to be conceived.

We cannot but be assured that the God, of whom and from whom all things, is imprehenfibly infinite. Locke.

IMPRESSIBLE, adj. [from impressibilis, Fr. in and compressibilis.] Not capable of being compressed into less space.

Their hardness is the reason why water is impreffible, when the air lodged in it is exhausted. Clyne.

God, and consequently to incur damnation.

To occur; to pish on the senses.

The motions of the minute parts of bodies are invisible, and incur not to the eye; but yet they are to be depended by experience.

Bacon's Natural History.

The mind of man, even in spirituals, acts with corporeal dependance, and so is he helped or hindered in its operations, according to the different quality of external objects that incur into the senses.

South's Sermons.

INCURABILITY. n. f. [incurability, Fr. from incurable.] Impossibility of cure; utter inflexibility of remedy.

We'll instantly open a door to the manner of a proper and improper consumption, together with the reason of the incurability of the former, and facile cure of the other.

Harvey.

INCURABLE. adj. [incurable, French, in and curable.] Not admitting remedy; not to be removed by medicine; irremediable; hopeless.

Pause not; for the present time's so fick,

That present need mine must be misintend,

Or overthrow us: Shakspeare.

Stop the rage betime,

Before the wound do grow incurable;

For being green there is great hope of help.

A schirrus is not absolutely incurable, because it has been known that fresh pasture has cured it in cattle.

If idiots and lunatics cannot be found, incurables may be taken into the hospital.

Swift.

INCURABLENESS. n. f. [from incurable.] State of not admitting any cure.

INCURABLY. adv. [from incurable.] Without remedy.

We cannot know it is or is not, being incurably ignorant.

Locke.

INCURIOS. adj. [in and curius.] Negligent; inattentive.

The Creator did not bestow so much skill upon his creatures, to be looked upon with a careless, incurious eye.

Derham.

He seldom at the park appear'd;

Yet, not incurious was inclin'd

To know the converse of mankind.

Swift.

INCURSION. n. f. [from incur, Latin.]

1. Attack; mischievous occurrence.

Sins of daily incur-sion, and such as human frailty is unavoidably liable to.

South's Sermons.

2. [Incur-sion, Fr.] Invasion without conquest; inroad; ravage.

Spain is very weak at home, or very slow to move, when they suffered a small fleet of English to make an hostile invasion, or incur-sion, upon their havens and roads.

Bacon.

Now the Parthian king hath gather'd all his host

Against the Scythian, whose incur-sions wild

Have wasted Soudiana.

Milton.

The incur-sions of the Goths disordered the affairs of the Roman empire.

Arbutnot on Cato.

INCURVATION. n. f. [from incurvus, Latin.]

1. The act of bending or making crooked.

One part moving while the other rests, one would think, should cause an incurvation in the line.

Glanville.

2. Flexion of the body in token of reverence.

He made use of acts of worship which God hath appropriated; as incurvation, and sacrifice.

Strikingfleet.

To INCURVATE. v. a. [incurvus, Latin.] To bend; to crook.

Sir Isaac Newton has shewn, by several experiments of iron passing by the edges of bodies, that they are incurvated by the action of these bodies.

INCURVITY. n. f. [from incurvus, Latin.] Crookedness; the state of bending inward.

The incurvity of a dolphin must be taken not really, but in appearance, when they leap above water, and suddenly bend down again: straight bodies, in a sudden motion, projected obliquely downward, appear crooked.

Brown's Vagor Errors.

To INDAGATE. v. a. [indagare, Latin.] To search; to look out.

INDAGATION. n. f. [from indagare.] Search; enquiry; examination.

Paracelsus directs us, in the indagatio of colours, to have an eye principally upon salts.

Part hath been discovered by himself, and some by human indagation.

INDAGATOR. n. f. [indagator, Latin.] A searcher; an enquirer; an examiner.

The number of the elements of bodies is an enquiry which truth requires to be searched into by such skillful inquirers at nature.

To INDART. v. a. [in and dart.] To dart in; to strike in.

I'll look to like, if looking liking meet;

But no more deep will I indart mine eye,

Than your content gives strength to make it fly.

Shakspeare.

To INDERT. v. a.

1. To put into debt.

2. To oblige; to put under obligation.

INDEBTED. participle adj. [in and debt.] Obligated by something received; bound to restitution; having incurred a debt.

It has to before the person to whom the debt is due, and for before the thing received.

If the course of politic affairs cannot in any good way forward without fix instruments, and that which stands to be their virtues, let policy acknowledge itself indebted to religion, godliness being the chiefest root and well-spring of all virtues, even as God is of all good things.

Forgive us our sins; for we forgive every one that is indebted to us.

Lat. in 4.

He for himself

Indebted and undone, has sought to bring

This blist affliction may

Th' indebted nation bounteously repay.

Graville.

Few consider how much we are indebted to government, because few can represent how wretched mankind would be without it.

Arbutnot's Sermons.

Let us represent to our souls the love and benediction for which we daily stand indebted to God.

Roper's Sermons.

We are wholly indebted for them to our nation.

Swift.

INDECENTY. n. f. [indecent, French.] Any thing unbecoming; any thing contrary to good manners; something witty, but scarce criminal.

He will in vain endeavour to reform indecency in his people, which he allows in himself.

Lat. indecent, French; in and decet.] Unbecoming; unfit for the eyes or ears.

'Till these men can prove these things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, the use of them, as established amongst us, is necessary.

Characters, where obscene words were proper in our mouths, but very indecent to be heard.

INDECENTLY. adv. [from indecent.] Without decency, in a manner contrary to decency.

INDECIDUOUS. adj. [in and deciduus.] Not falling; not fixed.

We find the statue of the sun framed with rays about the head, which were the indeciduous and unshaken locks of Apollo.

Brown's Vagor Errors.

INDECLINABLE. adj. [indeclinable, Fr. indeclinabilis, Latin.] Not varied by terminations.

Pondo is an indeclinable word, and when it is joined to numerals it signifies libra.

Arbutnot.

INDECOROUS. adj. [indecorus, Latin.] Indecent; unbecoming.

What can be more indecorous than for a creature to violate the commands, and trample upon the authority of the word of God?

INDECORUM. n. f. [Latin.] Indecency; something unbecoming.

INDEED. adv. [in and deed.]

1. In reality; in truth; in verity.

Yet loving indeed, and therefore constant.

Though such assemblies be had indeed for religion's sake, yet hurtful nevertheless they may prove, as well in regard to the fitness to serve the turn of heretics, and such as gently will venture to inflame their poison into new minds.

Some, who have not deserved judgment of death, have been for their goods sake caught up and carried straight to the gallows.

Shakspeare.

a thing indeed very pitiful and horrible.

2. Above

2. Above common rate.

Then didst thou utter, I am yours for ever;

'Tis grace indeed.

Borrow, in mean affairs, his subjects pains;

But things of weight and consequence indeed,

Himself doth in his chamber them debate.

Such sons of Abraham, how highly favour they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being Israelites indeed.

I were a beast, indeed, to do you wrong,

Who have lov'd and honour'd you so long.

3. This is to be granted that. A particle of connection.

This limitation, indeed, of our author, will save those the labour who would look for Adam's heir amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery of one next heir among them.

There is nothing in the world more generally dreaded, and yet less to be feared, than death: indeed, for those unhappy men whose hopes terminate in this life, no wonder if the prospect of another seems terrible and amazing.

4. It is used sometimes as a slight assertion or recapitulation in a sense hardly perceptible or explicable.

This is indeed more criminal in thee.

I said I thought it was confederacy between the juggler and the two servants; tho' indeed I had no reason so to think. Bae.

Some fops indeed, some very few we see,

Who keep themselves from this infection free.

There is indeed no greater pleasure in visiting these magazines of war, after one has seen two or three of them. Addif.

5. It is used to note concession in comparisons.

Against these forces were prepared to the number of near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion.

INDEFA'TIGABLE. adj. [indefatigabilis, in and defatig, Lat.] Unwearied; not tired; not exhausted by labour.

Who shall spread his airy flight,

Upborne with indefatigable wings,

Over the vast abrupt.

The ambitious person must rise early and sit up late, and pursue his design with a constant indefatigable attendance: he must be infinitely patient and fervent.

INDEFA'TIGABLY. adv. [from indefatigabilis.] Without weariness.

A man indefatigably zealous in the service of the church and state, and whose virtues have highly deserved of both. Dryd.

So indefectible is our estate in those joys, that, if we do not sell it in reversion, we shall, when once invested, be beyond the possibility of ill husbandry.

INDEFENSIBLE. adj. [in and defensum, Lat.] What cannot be defended or maintained.

As they extend the rule of consulting Scripture to all the actions of common life, even so far as to the taking up of a straw, so it is altogether false and indefensible.

INDEFINITE. adj. [indefinitus, Latin; indefinit, Fr.]

1. Not determined; not limited; not settled.

Though a position should be wholly rejected, yet that negative is more pregnant of direction than an indefinite; as ashes are more generative than dust.

Her advancement was left indefinite; but thus, that it should be as great as ever any former queen of England had.

Tragedy and picture are more narrowly circumscribed by place and time than the epic poem: the time of this last is left indefinite.

2. Large beyond the comprehension of man, though not absolutely without limits.

Though it is not infinite, it may be indefinite; though it is not boundless in itself, it may be so to human comprehension.

INDEFINITELY. adv. [from indefinitus.]

1. Without any settled or determinate limitation.

We observe that custom, whereunto St. Paul alludeth, and whereof the fathers of the church in their writings make often mention, to these indefinitely what was done; but not universally to bind for ever all prayers unto one only fashion of utterance.

We conceive no more than the letter beareth; that is, four times, on indefinitely more than three.

A duty to which all are indefinitely obliged, upon some occasions, by the express command of God.

2. To a degree indefinite.

If the world be indefinitely extended, that is, so far as no human intellect can fancy any bounds of it, then what we meet must be the least part.

INDEFINITUDE. n. f. [from indefinitus.] Quantity not limited by our understanding, though yet finite.

'Twas wife to a strange and prodigious multitude, if not infinite.

definitude, by their various positions, combinations, and conjunctions.

INDELIBERATE. adj. [indefinit, Fr. in and deliberat.] Unpremeditated; done without consideration.

Actions proceeding from blandishments, or sweet persuasions, if they be indefinit, as in children, who want the use of reason, are not presently free actions.

The love of God better can confit with the indefinit commissions of many sins, than with an allowed perfidy in any one.

INDELIBLY. adj. [indefinit, Fr. indefinit, Lat. in and delib.] It should be written indefinit.

1. Not to be blotted out or effaced.

Willful perpetrations of unworthy actions brands with indefinit characters the name and memory.

Thy heedless sleeve will drink the colour'd oil, And spot indefinit thy pocket foil.

2. Not to be annulled.

All endued with indefinit power from above to feed, to govern this household, and to consecrate pastors and stewards of it to the world's end.

INDELICACY. n. f. [in and delicacy.] Want of delicacy; want of elegant decency.

Your papers would be chargeable with worse than indelicate, they would be immoral, do you treat detestible uncleannesses as you rally an impudent self-love.

INDELICATE. adj. [in and delicat.] Wanting decency; void of a quick sense of decency.INDEMNIFICATION. n. f. [from indemnify.]

1. Security against loss or penalty.

2. Reimbursement of loss or penalty.

TO INDEMNIFY. v. a. [in and demni.]

1. To secure against loss or penalty.

2. To maintain unhurt.

Insolent signifies rude and haughty, indemnify to keep safe.

INDEMNITY. n. f. [indemnitas, French.] Security from punishment; exemption from punishment.

I will use all means, in the ways of amnesty and indemnity, which may most fully remove all fears, and bury all jealousies in forgetfulness.

TO INDENT. v. a. [in and denti, a tooth, Lat.] To mark any thing with inequalities like a row of teeth; to cut in and out; to make to wave or undulate.

About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,

Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd

The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,

Seeing Orlando, it unlinked itself,

And with indented glides did slip away

Into a bush.

The serpent then, not with indented wave, Prone on the ground, as fence; but on his rear Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a surging maze!

Trent, who, like some earth-born giant, spreads His thirty arms along the indented meads.

The margins on each side do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented.

To INDENT. v. n. [from the method of cutting counterparts of a contract together, that, laid on each other, they may fit, and any want of conformity may discover a fraud.] To contract; to bargain; to make a compact.

Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears, When they have lost and forfeited themselves?

He defends to the solemnity of a pact and covenant, and has indented with us.

INDENT. n. f. [from the verb.] Inequality; incisure; indentation.

Trent shall not wind with such a deep indent, To rob me of so rich a bottom here.

INDENTATION. n. f. [in and denti, Latin.] An indentation; waving in any figure.

The margins on each side do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented; each indentation being continued in a small ridge across the line, to the indentation that answers it on the opposite margin.

INDENTURE. n. f. [from indent.] A covenant, so named because the counterparts are indented or cut one by the other.

In Hall's chronicle much good matter is quite marred with indenture English.

The trick to his grief will find How firmly these indentures bind.

INDEPENDENCE. n. f. [independence, Fr. in and dependence.] FREEDOM. Exemption from reliance or control; state over which none has power.

Dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of a human soul, and some intimations of its independency on matter.

Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence.

Give me, I cry'd, enough for me,
My bread and independence;
So bought an annual rent or two,
And liv'd just as you see I do.

Pope.

INDEPENDENT. adj. [Independent, Fr. in and dependent.]

1. Not depending; not supported by any other, not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from before the object; of which on seems most proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on.

Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South.

Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world was never without men in that state. Locke.

The town of St. Gaul is a protestant republic, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons. Addison.

2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superior cause or power.

The consideration of our understanding, which is an incorporeal substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance; these alone do very easily guide us to the wise Author of all things. Bentley.

INDEPENDENT. n. f. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a complete church, subject to no superior authority.

We shall, in our sermons, take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly quarrelled at by presbyterians, independents, or other puritan sectaries. Sanders.

A very famous independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison.

INDEPENDENTLY. adv. [from independent.] Without reference to other things.

Dispose lights and shadows, without finishing every thing, independently the one of the other. Dryden.

INDESTRUCTIBLE. n. f. [in and destructible.] Want of merit.

Those who were once looked on as his equals, are apt to think the fame of his merit a reflection on their own inferiority. Addison.

INDESTRUCTIBLY. adv. [indestructible, Fr. in and definit, Latin.] Without cessation.

They continue a month indefinitely. Ray.

INDESTRUCTIBLE. adj. [in and destructible.] Not to be destroyed.

Glass is so compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature. Boyle.

INDETERMINABLE. adj. [in and determinable.] Not to be fixed; not to be defined or settled.

There is not only obscurity in the end, but beginning of the world; that as its period is inscrutable, so is its nativity indeterminate. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INDETERMINATE. adj. [indeterminate, Fr. in and determinate.] Unfixed; not defined; indefinite.

The rays of the same colour were by turns transmitted at one thickness, and reflected at another thickness, for an indeterminate number of successions. Newton.

INDETERMINATELY. adv. [in and determinately.] Indefinitely; not in any settled manner.

His peripatetic discerned the loadstone to respect the north, when others beheld it indeterminate. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The depth of the hold is indeterminate expressed in the description. Arbutnot.

INDETERMINED. adj. [in and determined.] Unsettled; unfixed.

We should not amuse ourselves with floating words of indetermined signification, which we can use in several senses to serve a turn. Locke.

INDETERMINATION. n. f. [in and determination.] Want of determination; want of fixed or stated direction.

By contingents I understand all things which may be done, and may not be done, may happen, or may not happen, by reason of the indetermination or accidental concurrence of the causes. Bramhall.

INDEVOTION. n. f. [indevotion, Fr. in and devotion.] Want of devotion; irreligion.

Let us make the church the scene of our penitence, as of our faults; deprecate our former indevotion, and, by an exemplary reverence, redress the scandal of our profaneness. Decay of Piety.

INDEVOUT. adj. [indevout, Fr. in and devout.] Not devout; not religious; irreligious.

He prays much, yet curses more; whilst he is meek, but indevout. Decay of Piety.

INDEX. n. f. [Latin.]

1. The discoverer; the pointer out.

Tastes are the index of the different qualities of plants, as well as of all sorts of aliment. Arbutnot.

That which was once the index to point out all virtues, does now mark out that part of the world where least of them resides. Decay of Piety.

2. The hand that points to any thing, as to the hour or way.

They have no more inward self-confidence of what they do or suffer, than the index of a watch, of the hour it points to.

3. The table of contents to a book.

In such indexes, although small
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant male
Of things to come, at large.

If a book has no index, or good table of contents, is very useful to make one as you are reading it; and in your next take notice only of parts new to you.

INDEXERITY. n. f. [in and destriv.] Want of literary want of readiness; want of handiness.

The indexerity of our consumption-curers determines their dimness in beholding its cause.

INDIAN Arrow-root. n. f. [maranta, Latin.] A root.

It has a flower consisting of one leaf, almost round, opening in six parts, three of which are alternately larger than the others: the lower part of the flower-cup alternately becomes an oval shaped fruit, having one cell, with one seed rough feed. It was brought from the Spanish territories of America into the islands of Barbadoes and Jamaica, where it is cultivated as a medicinal plant, it being a sovereign remedy for curing the bite of wasps, and expelling the poison of the manchiuel tree. This root the Indians apply to excise the venom of their arrows: after they have dug it up they clean it, wash it, and lay it as a poultice to the wounded part, and are generally successful in the cure. Miller.

INDIAN Cress. n. f. [arvacilla, Latin.] A plant.

The leaves are round, umbellated, and placed alternately; the stalks trailing; the cup of the flower is squarish; the flowers consist of five leaves in form of a violet; the leaf are roundish and rough, three of them succeeding each flower. The species are five. Miller.

INDIAN Fig. n. f. [apuntia, Latin.] A plant.

The characters are: the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose, having a great number of stamina in the centre, which grow upon the top of the ovary: the ovary afterwards becomes a fleshy umbellated fruit, with a soft pulp, inclosing many seeds, which are for the most part angular. Miller.

INDIAN Red. n. f. A kind of mineral earth.

Indian red, so called by the painters, is a species of ochre; and is a very fine purple earth, of firm compact texture, and great weight: while in the stratum it is of a pure blood colour, and almost of a stony hardness: when dry it is of a dingy red, of a rough dusty surface, and when broken, all of white particles, large, solid, bright, and glittering. It is also called Persian earth, and is dug in the island of Ombre or the Persian gulph, and also at Bombay. Hill.

INDICANT. adj. [indicant, Latin.] Showing; pointing out; that which directs what is to be done in any disease.

TO INDICATE. v. a. [indica, Latin.]

1. Mark; token; sign; note; symptom.

The frequent flops they make in the most common cases, are a plain indication of their weakness. Adams.

We think that our successes are a plain indication of the divine favour towards us.

2. [In physics.] Indication is of four kinds: vital, preservative, curative, and palliative, as it directs what is to be done to continue life, cutting off the cause of an approaching disorder, curing it whilst it is actually present, or lessening its effects, or taking off some of its symptoms before it can be wholly removed. Boerhaave.

These be the things that govern nature patiently, and without which you cannot make any true analysis and indication of the proceedings of nature. Boerhaave.

The deprivation of the instruments of modification is a natural indication of a liquid diet. Arbutnot.

3. Discovery made; intelligence given.

If a person, that had a fair estate in reversion, should be assured by some skillful physician, that he would eventually fall into a disease that would totally deprive him of his understanding and memory; if, I say, upon a certain belief of this indication, the man should appear overjoyed at the news, would not all that law him conclude that the disclaimer had been him? Boerhaave.

INDICATIVE. adj. [indicativus, Lat.]

1. Showing; informing; pointing out.

2. [In grammar.] A certain modification of a verb, expressing affirmation or indication.

The verb is formed in a certain manner to affirm, deny, or interrogate; which formation, from the principal use of it, is called the indicative mood. Crus.

INDICATIVELY. adv. [from indicative.] In such a manner as shows or betokens.

These images, formed in the brain, are indicatively of the species with those of sense. Crus.

TO INDICT. See INDITE, and its derivatives. Isaac.

INDICTION, n. f. [indiction, Fr. indies, Latin.]

1. Declaration; proclamation.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation and indiction of a war, the war is left at large. Bar.
 2. [In chronology.] The indiction, instituted by Constantine the great, is properly a cycle of tributes, orderly disposed, for fifteen years, and by it accounts of that kind were kept. Afterwards, in memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Maxentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 313, by which an entire freedom was given to Christianity, the council of Nice, for the honour of Constantine, ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, which till that time had been done; but that, instead thereof, the indiction should be made use of, by which to reckon and date their years, which hath its epocha A. D. 313, Jan. 1.

INDIFFERENCE, n. f. [indifference, French; indifferentia, Latin.]

1. Neutrality; suspension; equipoise or freedom from motives on either side.

In choice of committees it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifference by putting in those that are strong on both sides. Bacon.

By an equal indifference for all truth, I mean, not loving it as such, before we know it to be true. Locke.

A perfect indifference in the mind, not determinable by its last judgment, would be as great an imperfection as the want of indifference to act, or not to act, till determined by the will. Locke.

Those who would borrow light from expositors, either consult only those who have the good luck to be thought sound and orthodox, avoiding those of different sentiments; or else with indifference look into the notes of all commentators. Locke.

2. Impartiality.

Read the book with indifference and judgment, and thou can't not but greatly commend it. Whitgift.

3. Negligence; want of affection; unconcernedness.

Indifference cannot but be criminal, when it is conversant about objects which are so far from being of an indifferent nature, that they are of the highest importance. Addison.

A place which we must pass through, not only with the indifference of strangers, but with the vigilance of those who travel through the country of an enemy. Regent.

Indifference, clad in wisdom's guise,

All fortitude of mind supplies;

For how can stony bowels melt,

In those who never pity felt? Swift.

He will let you know he has got a clap with as much indifference as he would a piece of public news. Swift.

The people of England should be frightened with the French king and the pretender once a year: the want of observing this necessary precept, has produced great indifference in the vulgar. Arbutnot.

4. State in which no moral or physical reason preponderates; state in which there is no difference.

The choice is left to our discretion, except a principal bond of some higher duty remove the indifference that such things have in themselves: their indifference is removed, if we take away our own liberty. Hooker.

INDIFFERENT, adj. [indifferent, Fr. indifferent, Latin.]

1. Neutral; not determined to either side.

Doubt his majesty

Incline to it or no?

—He seems indifferent. Shakespeare.

Being indifferent, we should receive and embrace opinions according as evidence gives the attestation of truth. Locke.

Let guilt or fear

Disturb man's rest; Cato knows neither of them:

Indifferent in his choice to sleep or die. Addison.

2. Unconcerned; inattentive; regardless.

One thing was all to you, and your fondness made you indifferent to every thing else. Temple.

It was a remarkable law of Solon, that any person who, in the civil commotions of the republic, remained neuter, or an indifferent spectator of the contending parties, should be condemned to perpetual banishment. Addison.

But how indifferent forever man may be to eternal happiness, yet surely to eternal misery none can be indifferent. Regent.

3. Not to have such difference as that the one is for its own sake preferable to the other.

The nature of things indifferent is neither to be commanded nor forbidden, but left free and arbitrary. Hooker.

These two customs, which of themselves are indifferent in other kingdoms, became exceeding evil in this realm, by reason of the inconveniences which followed thereupon. Davies.

Though at first it was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet, the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not to indifferent. South.

This I mention only as my conjecture, it being indifferent to the matter in hand which way the learned shall determine. Lac.

4. Impartial, disinterested.

Medicall was partial to none, but indifferent to all; a master for the whole, and a father to every one. Albam.

I am a most poor woman, and a stranger;

Born out of your dominions: having here

No judge indifferent, and no more assurance

Of equal friendship and proceeding. Shakespeare.

There can hardly be an indifferent trial had between the king and the subject, or between party and party, by reason of this general kindred and consanguinity. Davies.

5. Passible; having mediocrity; of a middling state; neither good nor worst. This is an improper and colloquial use, especially when applied to persons.

Some things admit of mediocrity:

A counsellor, or pleader at the bar;

May want Metellus's powerful eloquence,

Or be less read than deep Cassellus;

Yet this indifferent lawyer is esteem'd. Reynolds.

Who would excel, when few can make a test

Between indifferent writing and the best? Dryden.

This has obliged me to publish an indifferent collection of poems, for fear of being thought the author of a worse. Prior.
 There is not one of these subjects that would not sell a very indifferent paper, could I think of gratifying the publick by such mean and base methods. Addison.

6. In the same sense it has the force of an adverb.

I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better that my mother had not borne me. Shakespeare.

This will raise a great scum on it, and leave your wine indifferent clear. Mortimer.

INDIFFERENTLY, adv. [indifferenter, Latin.]

1. Without distinction; without preference.

Old age makes the cornea and coat of the crystalline-humour grow flatter than before; so that the light, for want of a sufficient refraction, will not converge to the bottom of the eye, but beyond it; and by consequence paint in the bottom of the eye a confused picture; and according to the indistinctness of this picture, the object will appear confused. Newton.

INDISTURBANCE, n. f. [in and disturb.] Calmness; freedom from disturbance. What is called by the flocks apathy, and by the sceptics indisturbance, seems all but to mean great tranquillity of mind. Temple.

INDIVIDUAL, adj. [individu, individual, Fr. individuel, Lat.]

1. Separate from others of the same species; single; numerically one. Neither is it enough to consult, secundum genera, what the kind and character of the person should be; for the most judgment is shown in the choice of individuals. Bacon.

They present us with images more perfect than the life in any individual. Dryden.

Mult the whole man, amazing thought I return To the cold marble, or contact'd urn; And never shall those particles agree, That were in life this individual lie! Prior.

12 F Know

Know all the good that individuals find,
Lie in three words, health, peace, and competence. Pope.
We see each circumstance of art and individual of nature furnished together by the extent and fecundity of his imagination.

It would be wise in them, as individual and private mortals, to look back a little upon the forms they have raised, as well as those they have escaped. Swift.

The object of any particular idea is called an individual: so
Peter is an individual man, London an individual city. Watts.
2. Undivided; not to be parted or disjointed.

To give thee being, I lent
Out of my sight to thee, nearest my heart,
Substantial life, to have thee by my side
Henceforth an individual soul dear. Milton.

Long eternity shall greet our bliss
With an individual kiss. Milton.
Under his great vicergerent reign abide United, as one individual soul,
For ever happy. Milton.

INDIVIDUALITY. n. f. [from individual.] Separate or distinct existence.
Crambe would tell his instructor, that all men were not singular;
that individuality could hardly be predicated of any man; for it was commonly said that a man is not the same he was, and that mad men are beside themselves. Arbutnot.

INDIVIDUALLY. adv. [from individual.] With separate or distinct existence; numerically.
How should that submit solitarily by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very frame whereby others subsist with it. Hesker.

I dare not pronounce him omniscient, that being an attribute individually proper to the Godhead, and incommunicable to any created substance. Hatuevill.

from others of the same species; to make single.

Life is individuated into infinite numbers, that have their distinct sense and pleasure. Mere against Atheism.
No man is capable of translating poetry, who, besides a genius to that art, is not a master both of his author's language and of his own; nor must we understand the language only of the poet, but his particular turn of thoughts and expression, which are the characters that distinguish and individuate him from all other writers. Dryden.

INDIVIDUATION. n. f. [from individuatus.] That which makes an individual.
What is the principle of individuation? Or what is it that makes any one thing the same as it was before? Watts.

INDIVIDUITY. n. f. [from individuus, Lat.] The state of being an individual; separate existence.
INDIVIDUITY. n. f. [in and divinity.] Want of divine power.
Not in use.

How openly did the oracle betray his indivinity unto Caesus, who being ruined by his amphibology, and expostulating with him, received no higher answer than the excuse of his impotency. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INDIVISIBILITY. n. f. [from indivisible.] State in which no
INDIVISIBleness. } more division can be made.
A pebble and mortar wall as soon bring any particle of matter to indivisibility as the acutest thought of a mathematician.
Locke.

INDIVISIBLE. adj. [indivisible, Fr. in and divisible.] What cannot be broken into parts; so small as that it cannot be smaller;
having reached the last degree of divisibility.

By atom, no body will imagine we intend to express a perfect indivisible, but only the least sort of natural bodies. Digby.
Here is but one indivisible point of time observed, but one action performed; yet the eye cannot comprehend at once the whole object. Dryden.

of knowledge. Bacon.

INDUBITABLY. adv. [from indubitabilis.] Undoubtedly; unquestionably.
If we transport these proportions from audible to visible objects, there will indubitably result from either a general and harmonious contentment. Watts.

The patriarchs were indubitably invested with both these authorities. Spenser.

I appeal to all sober judges, whether our souls may be a mere echo from clashing atoms; or rather indivinity may proceed from a spiritual substance. Bacon.

INDUBITATE. adj. [indubitatus, Latin.] Unquestioned; certain; apparent; evident.
If he stood upon his own title of the house of indivinity, he knew it was condemned by parliament, and tended directly to the disinheritor of the line of York, held then the indivinity heirs of the crown. Bacon.

I have been tempted to wonder how, among the indivinity of state and court, Edgar Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitable heir of the Saxon line. Bacon.

TO INDUCE. v. a. [inducere, Fr. inducere, Latin.]
1. To persuade; to influence to any thing.

The self-same argument in this kind, which did but indivinity
the vulgar sort to like, may constrain the wiser to yield. Bacon.

This lady, albeit she was furnished with many excellent endowments both of nature and education, yet would she never be induced to entertain marriage with any. Howard.

Desire with thee still longer to converse Induc'd me. Milton.

Let not the covetous desire of growing rich indivinity ruin your reputation, but rather satisfy yourself with a moderate fortune; and let your thoughts be wholly taken up with acquiring to yourself a glorious name. Dryden.

2. To produce by persuasion or influence.
Let the variety of the times be restrained, which this neighbourhood of other nations have induced, and we shall appear to exceed our pattern. Bacon.

As this belief is absolutely necessary to all mankind, the evidence for indivinity it must be of that nature as to accommodate itself to all species of men. Bacon.

3. To offer by way of indivinity, or consequential reasoning.

What a strange infection

Is fall'n into thy ear!

Shakespeare.

The blessed gods

Purge all infections from our air, whilst you
Do climate here.

Shakespeare.

Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For their known evils but to give me leave,

By circumstance, to curse thy curst self.

Shakespeare.

Hence,

Left that th' infection of his fortune take
Like hold on thee.

Shakespeare.

The transmigration or emission of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as in odours and infectants, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal; but wital there be a number of those emissions, both wholesome and unwholesome, that give no smell at all.

Bacon.

INFECTIONOUS. adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities.

The most infectious pestilence upon thee!

Shakespeare.

In a house,

Where the infectious pestilence did reign.

Shakespeare.

Some known diseases are infectious, and others are not: those that are infectious are such as are chiefly in the spirits, and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such as pestilences and lippitudes.

Bacon.

Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases; which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operation of some poisons, that are received only by the smell.

Temple.

INFECTIONOUSLY. adv. [from infectious.] Contagiously.

The will does, that is inclinable

Locke.

Yet what thou can't attain, which best may serve

To glorify the Maker, and infer
Thee also happier, shall not be with-held

Thy hearing.

Milton.

Great,

Or bright, infern not excellence: the earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glittering, may of solid good contain

More plenty than the sun, that barren shines.

Milton.

One would wonder how, from so differing premises, they should all infer the same conclusion.

Decay of Piety.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchasing publick esteem, by deserving well of mankind; and such opportunities always infer obligations.

Atterbury.

INGENERATE. } adj. [ingeneratus, Latin.]

INGENERATED. }
1. Inborn; innate; inbred.

Those virtues were rather feigned and affected things to serve his ambition, than true qualities ingenerate in his judgment or nature. Bacon's Henry VII.

In divers children their ingenerate and feminal powers lie deep, and are of slow disclosure. Writ. n.

Those noble habits are ingenerated in the soul, as religion, gratitude, obedience, and tranquillity. Hale.

2. Unbegotten. Not commonly used.
Yet shall we demonstrate the same, from persons presumed as far from us in condition as time; that is, our first and ingenerated forefathers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INGENIOUS. adj. [ingenieux, French; ingeniosus, Latin.]

1. Witty; inventive; possessed of genius.

'Tis a perious boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable:
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakespeare.
Our ingenious friend Cowley not only has employed much eloquence to persuade that truth in his preface, but has in one of his poems given a noble example of it. Boyle.

2. Mental; intellectual. Not in use.

The king is mad: how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows; better I were distracted. Shakespeare.

INGENIOUSLY. adv. [from ingenious.] Wittily; subtilly.

I will not pretend to judge by common fears, or the schemes of men too ingeniously politic. Temple.

INGENIOUSNESS. n. f. [from ingenius.]

I am disapproving, the more dangerous it is. Boyle.

INGENITE. adj. [ingenitus, Latin.] Innate; inborn; native;
ingenerate.

Aristotle affirms the mind to be at first a mere rasa tabula;
and that notions are not ingenerate, and imprinted by the finger of nature, but by the latter and more languid impressions of sense, being only the reports of observation, and the result of so many repeated experiments. South.

We give them this ingenerate, moving force,

That makes them always downward take their course. Black.

INGENUITY. n. f. [ingenuitas, Fr. from ingenuus.]

1. Openness; fairness; candour; freedom from dissimulation.
Such of high quality, or other of particular note, as shall fall under my pen, I shall not let pass without their due character, being part of my professed ingenuity. Watson.

My constancy I to the planets give;
Mine ingenuity and openness
To jealous; to buffoons my pensiveness. Donne.

I know not whether it be more brave or wiser, that men can so put off ingenuity, and the native greatness of their kind, as to defend to be false, to ignore a vice. Gov. of the Tongues.

If a child, when questioned for any thing, directly confesses, you must commend his ingenuity, and pardon the fault, be it what it will. Locke.

2. [From ingenius.] Wit; invention; genius; subtilty; acuteness.
These are but the frigidities of wit, and become not the genius of manly ingenuity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The ancient antinical hypothesis might have slept for ever, had not the ingenuity of the present age recalled it from its urn and silence. Glanville.

Such fops have neither parts nor wit, ingenuity of discourse, nor fineness of conversation, to entertain or delight any one. South.

A pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity, and how much an honest simplicity is preferable to fine parts and subtile speculations. B. edward.

INGENUOUS. adj. [ingenuus, Latin.]

1. Open; fair; candid; generous; noble.

Many speeches there are of Job's, whereby his wisdom and other virtues may appear; but the glory of an ingenuous mind he hath purchased by these words only. Behold I will lay mine hand upon my mouth; I have spoken once, yet will I not therefore maintain argument: yea twice, howbeit for that cause further I will not proceed. Flecker.

Infusing into their young breasts such an ingenuous and noble ardour, as would not fail to make many of them renowned. Adis.

If an ingenuous detestation of this shameful vice be but carefully and early instilled, that is the true and genuine method to obviate dishonesty. Locke.

2. Freeborn; not of servile extraction.

Subjection, as it preserves property, peace, and safety, so it will never diminish rights nor ingenuous liberties. K. Charles.

INGENUOUSLY. adv. [from ingenuus.] Openly; fairly; candilly; generously.

Ingenuously I speak,
No blame belongs to thee.

It was a notable observation of a wife father, and no less ingenuously confessed, that those which held and persuaded perfure of consciences were commonly interested. Boyle.

I will ingenuously confess, that the helps were taken from the vines of the church of England.

INGENUOUSNESS. n. f. [from ingenuus.] Openness; fairness;

of the overfidge no alteration.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,

Through which ingested meats with ease descend. Swift.

INGESTION. n. f. [from ingest.] The act of throwing into the stomach.

It has got room enough to grow into its full dimensions, which is performed by the daily ingestion of milk and other food, that's in a short time after ingested into blood. Harvey.

INGLOUROUS. adj. [inglorius, Latin.] Void of honour;
mean; without glory.

Left fear return them back to Egypt, chasing Inglorious life with servitude. Milton.

It was never held inglorious or derogatory for a king to be guided by his great council, nor dishonouring for a king to yield and bow to their king.

Yet though our army brought not conquest home,

I did not from the fight inglorious come. Dryden.

INGLOUOUSLY. adv. [from inglorius.] With ignominy; with want of glory.

This case the chief o'ercome,
Replenish'd not ingloriously at home. Pope.

INGRAVE. } adj. [ingratus, Latin; ingrat, French.]

INGRAVEFUL. }
1. Ungrateful; unthankful.

That we have been familiar,
Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

And you degenerate, you ingrate revols,
You bloody Neros. Shalton.

So will fall

He and his faithless progeny: whose fault?
Whose but his own? Ingrate; he had of me
All he could have: I made him just and right,

Sufficient to have flood, though free to fall.
Words! which no ear ever to hear in heav'n!

Expected; least of all from thee, ingrate!
Perfidious and ingrate! Pope.

His stores ye ravage, and usurp his state.
2. Unpleasing to the sense.

The causes of that which is pleasing or ingrate to the earing, may receive light by that which is pleasing and ingrate to the sight. Bacon's Natural History.

He gives no ingrateful food.

TO INGRAVATE. v. a. [in and gravis, Latin.] To put on vow; to recommend to kindness. Pope.

Those have been far from receiving the rewards of such ingratiating with the people. King Lear et.

Their managers turn water into blood for them, make them fee armies in the air, and give them their word, the more to ingratiare themselves with them, that they signify nothing less than future slaughter and desolation. Audien.

Politicians, who would rather ingratiare themselves with their sovereign than promote his real service, accommodate his counsels to his inclinations. Spenser, N° 479.

INGRATITUDE. n. f. [ingratitude, French; in and gratitude.] Reiteration of evil for good; unthankfulness.

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou show'st thee in a child,
Than the sea monster. Shakespeare.

Ingratitude is abhorred both by God and man, and vengeance attends those that repay evil for good. L'Estrange.

Nor was it with ingratitude return'd,
In equal fires the blissful couple burn'd;
One joy possess'd 'em both, and in one grief they mourn'd. Dryden.

INGREDIENT. n. f. [ingredient, French; ingredienti, Latin.] Component part of a body, consisting of different materials. It is commonly used of the simples of a medicine.

The ointment is made of ingredients innumerable, whereof the hardest to come by is the mors upon the skull of a dead man unburied. Bacon.

So deep the pow'r of these ingredients pierc'd,
E'en to the inmost feat of mental fight
That Adam, now enforc'd to shut his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd. Milton.

By this way of analysis we may proceed from compounds to ingredients, and from motions to the forces producing them; and in general, from effects to their causes, and from particular causes to more general ones, till the argument end in the more general. Newton.

I have often wondered, that learning is not thought a proper ingredient in the education of a woman of quality or fortune. Addison.

Parts, knowledge, and experience, are excellent ingredients in a publick character. Rogers.

Water is the chief ingredient in all the animal fluids and solids. Arbuthnot.

INGRESS. n. f. [ingress, French; ingressus, Latin.] Entrance; power of entrance.

All putrefactions come from the ambient body; either by ingress of the substance of the ambient body into the body putrefied; or else by excitation of the body putrefied by the body ambient. Bacon.

Those air-bladders, by a sudden subsidence, meet again by the ingress and egress of the air. Arbuthnot.

INGRESSIVE. n. f. [ingressivus, French; ingressivus, Lat.] The act of entering.

INHERENT. adj. [inherent, French; inherent, Lat.] Existing in something else, so as to be inseparable from it; innate; inborn.

I will not do't,
Left I surceale to honour mine own truth;
And my body's action, teach my mind
A most inherent baseness. Shakespeare.

I mean not the authority which is annexed to your office: I speak of that only which is inborn and inherent to your person. Dryden.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadstone; and a power to be so drawn is a part of the complex one of iron; which powers pass for inherent qualities. Locke.

Animal oil is various according to principles inherent in it. Arbuthnot.

They will be sure to decide in favour of themselves, and talk much of their inherent right. Dugby.

The ideas of such modes can no more be sufficient, than the idea of redness was just now found to be inherent in the blood, or that of whiteness in the brain. Bentley.

The obligation we are under of distinguishing ourselves as much by an inherent and habitual, as we are already distinguished by an external and relative holiness. Bentley.

TO INHERIT. v. a. [ex hereditate, French.] 1. To receive or possess by inheritance.

Treason is not inherited, my lord. Shakespeare.

Why,

And imitate the imitable force. Dryden.
Virgil copied this circumstance from the ancient sculptors;
in that imitable description of military fury in the temple of Janus. Addison.

IMITABLY, adv. [from imitable.] In a manner not to be imitated; to a degree of excellence above imitation.

A man could not have been always blind who thus imitably copies nature. Pope.

And in thick shelter of innumeros boughs,

Enjoy the comfort gentle sleep allows. P. p.

TO INOCULATE. v. a. [inocula, in and ocula, Latin.]

1. To propagate any plant by inserting its bud into another stock; to practise inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Not are the ways alike in all

How to ingraft, how to inoculate. Mayer.

Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree: inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month. Evelyn.

But various are the ways to change the state,

To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate. Dryden.

2. To yield a bud to another flock.

For tender plants 't inoculate. Cleveland.

Where lilies, in a lovely brown,

Inoculate carnation. Cleveland.

INOCULATION. n. f. [inoculatio, Lat. from inocula, Latin.]

1. Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stone fruit, and upon oranges and jasmines. In order to perform it, be provided with a sharp pen-knife, having a flat haft, and some found bas-mat. Having taken off the cuttings from the trees you would propagate, chuse a smooth part of the stock; then with your knife make an horizontal cut cross the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock: then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the foot-stalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it.

This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping are good for nothing: then raising the bark of the stock with the flat haft of your pen-knife clear to the wood, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock, cutting off any part of the rind belonging to the bud which may be too long; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round with balsam-um, beginning at the under part of the slit, and so proceed to the top, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud.

The March following cut off the stock three inches above the bud, slipping it, that the wet may pass off: to this part of the stock, above the bud, fasten the shoot which proceeds from the bud, and which would be in danger of being blown out;

but this must continue no longer than one year, after which it must be cut off close above the bud, that the stock may be covered thereby. Miller.

In the stem of Elaiagn they all met, and came to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation.

2. The practice of transplanting the small pox, by inserting the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the infected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than the frequently comes by infection.

What confusion of face shall we be under, when that grand inquest begins; when an account of our opportunities of doing good, and a particular of our use or misuse of them is given in?

Atterbury's Sermon.

2. [In law.] The inquest of jurors, or by jury, is the most usual trial of all causes, both civil and criminal, in our realm; for in civil causes, after proof is made on either side, so much as each part thinks good for himself, if the doubt be in the fact, it is referred to the discretion of twelve indifferent men, impanelled by the sheriff for the purpose, and as they bring in their verdict for judgment passes: for the judge saith, the jury finds the fact thus; then is the law thus, and so we judge. For the inquest in criminal causes, see JURY. Cowell.

3. Enquiry; search; study.

This is the laborious and vexatious inquest that the soul must make after science.

South.

This avarice of praise in time to come,

Thro' long incriptions crowded on the tomb.

Dryden.

2. Title.

Joubertus by the same title led our expedition, which we regard no advantage, it answering scarce at all the purpose of the inquisition.

3. [In law.] Is an obligation made in writing, whereby accuser binds himself to undergo the same punishment, if he shall not prove the crime which he objects to the person in his accusatory libel, as the defendant binds himself, if the same be proved.

4. Contingence of a book to a patron without a formal dedication.

INSCRUTABLE. adj. [inscrutabilis, Lat. inscrutable, Fr.] Unsearchable; not to be traced out by inquiry or enquiry.

A jell unseen, inscrutable, invisible,

As a weather-cock on a temple.

This king had a large heart, inscrutable for good, and a wholly bent to make his kingdom and people happy.

O how inscrutable! his equity

Twins with his power.

Hierunto they have ascribed as unto the engine, the great determinator of virgidity, conjunction, and disjunction, the inscrutable intimacies of the whole body.

We should contemplate reverently the wisdom and grace, the inscrutable ways of providence, and all the hidden methods of God's dealing with men.

To INSCRIPT. v. a. [inscribit, Latin.] To engrave.

A coin that bears the figure of an angel.

Stamp'd in gold, but that inscript upon.

INSCRIPTURE. n. f. [from in and scripture.] As the law is graved.

Timon is dead,

Entomb'd upon the very hem of the sea;

And on the grave-fence this inscripture, which

With wax I brought away.

It was usual to wear rings on either hand; between precious gems and rich inscriptures were added, the words wearing them was translated into the Latin.

Not fences, insolently loud;

Not those echoes of a thoughtless crowd,
Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree. Dryden.

Briant, being naturally of an haughty temper, treated him very insolently, and more like a criminal than a prisoner of war. Addison's Guardian.

INSOLUBLE. adj. [insolubilis, Fr. in and solus.] 1. Not to be solved; not to be cleared; inextricable; such as admits of no solution, or explication.

Spend a few thoughts on the puzzling inquiries concerning vacuums, the doctrine of infinites, indivisibles and incomensurables, wherein there appear some insoluble difficulties. Watts.

2. That cannot be paid.

INSOLUBLE. adj. [insolubilis, French; insolubilis, Latin.] 1. Not to be cleared; not to be relieved.

Admit this, and what shall the Scripture be but a snare and a torment to weak consciences, filling them with infinite scrupulosities, doubts insoluble, and extreme despair. Hooker.

2. Not to be dissolved or separated.

Stony matter may grow in any part of a human body; for when any thing insoluble sticks in any part of the body, it gathers a crust about it. Arbutnot.

INSOLVENT. adj. [in and solus, Latin.] Unable to pay.

By postick declaration he proclaimed himself insolvent of those vast sums he had taken upon credit. Houel.

A farmer accused his guards for robbing him of oxen, and the emperor shot the offenders; but demanding reparation of the accuser for so many brave fellows, and finding him insolvent, compounded the matter by taking his life. Addison.

An insolvent is a man that cannot pay his debts. Watts.

INSOLVENCY. n. f. [from insolvent.] Inability to pay debts.

INSOMUCH. conj. [in and much.] So that; to such a degree that.

It hath ever been the use of the conqueror to despise the language of the conquered, and to force him to learn his: so did the Romans always use, insomuch that there is no nation but is sprinkled with their language. Spenser.

To make ground fertile, albes excel; insomuch as the countries about Ætna have amended matters for the mischief the eruptions do. Bacon.

Simonde was an excellent poet, insomuch that he made his fortune by it. L'Estrange.

They made the ground uneven about their nest, insomuch that the slate did not lie flat upon it, but left a free passage underneath. Addison.

TO INSPECT. v. a. [inspectio, inspectum, Latin.] To look into by way of examination.

INSPECTION. n. f. [inspectio, French; inspectio, Latin.] 1. Prying examination; narrow and close survey.

With narrow search, and with inspection deep,
Consider every creature. Milton.

Our religion is a religion that dares to be understood; it that offers itself to the search of the inquisitive, to the inspection of the severest and the most awakened reason; for, being secure of her substantial truth and purity, she knows that for her to be seen and looked into, is to be embraced and admired, as there needs no greater argument for men to love the light than to see it. Saurb.

2. Superintendence; presiding care. In the first sense it should have into before the object, and in the second sense may admit ever; but authors confound them.

We may safely conceal our good deeds from the public view, when they run no hazard of being diverted to improper ends, for want of our own inspection. Atterbury.

We should apply ourselves to study the perfections of God, and to procure lively and vigorous impressions of his perpetual presence with us, and inspection over us. Atterbury.

The divine inspection into the affairs of the world, doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his existence. Bentley.

INSPECTOR. n. f. [Latin.] 1. A prying examiner.

With their new light our bold inspectors press,
Like Cham, to shew their father's nakedness. Denham.

2. A superintendent.

Where those immortal shapes
Of bright æreal spirits live inspected,
In regions mild of calm and serene air. Milton.

INSPIRABLE. adj. [from inspire.] Which may be drawn in with the breath; which may be infused.

To these inspirable hurts, we may enumerate those they sustain from their expiration of fuliginous steams. Harvey.

INSPIRATION. n. f. [from inspire.] 1. The act of drawing in the breath.

In any inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbutnot.

2. The act of breathing into any thing.

3. Infusion of ideas into the mind by a superior power.

I never spoke with her in all my life.
—How can she then call us by our names,
Unless it be by inspiration? Shatepeare.

Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspiration. Shatepeare.

We to his high inspiration owe,
That what was done before the flood we know. Denham.

What the tragedian wrote, the late success
Declares was inspiration, and not guess. Denham.

Inspiration is when an overpowering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it: so were the prophets and the apostles inspired. Watts.

TO INSPIRE. v. n. [inspira, Latin; inspirare, Fr.] To draw in the breath.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopp'd, it suddenly yields to nature, and dies. Watson.

TO INSPIRE. v. a. 1. To breathe into; to infuse into the mind; to impress upon the fancy.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
But dawning day new comfort hath inspired. Shatepeare.

He knew not his Maker, and he that inspired into him an active soul, and breathed in a living spirit. Wisd. xv. 11.

Then to the heart inspired Vernal delight. Milton.

2. To animate by supernatural infusion.

Nor th' inspired
Castalian spring. Milton.

Erato, thy poet's mind inspires,
And fill his soul with thy celestial fire. Dryden.

The letters are often read to the young religious, to inspire them with sentiments of virtue. Addison.

3. To draw in with the breath.

By means of sulphurous coal smoke the lungs are filled and oppressed, whereby they are forced to inspire and expire the air with difficulty, in comparison of the facility of inspiring and expiring the air in the country. Harvey.

His baleful breath inspiring as he glides;
Now like a chain around her neck he rides. Dryden.

INSPIRER. n. f. [from inspire.] He that inspires.

To the infinite God, the omnipotent creator and preserver of the world, the most gracious redeemer, sanctifier, and inspirer of mankind, be all honour. Deburn.

TO INSPIRE. v. a. [in and spirit.] To animate; to accustom; to fill with life and vigour; to enliven; to invigorate; to encourage.

It has pleased God to inspire and actuate all his evangelical methods by a concurrence of supernatural strength, which makes it not only eligible but possible; easy and pleasant for us to do whatever he commands us. Decay of Piety.
A discreet use of becoming ceremonies renders the service of the church solemn and affecting, inspires the sluggish, and inflames even the devout worshipper. Auricular.
The courage of Agamemnon is inspired by love of empire and ambition. Pope.

Let joy or ease, let assuance or content,
And the gay confidence of a life well spent,
Calm every thought, inspire every grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

To INSPIRATE. v. a. [in and spirat, Lat.] To thicken; to make thick.

Sugar doth inspire the spirits of the wine, and maketh them not so easy to resolve into vapour. Bacon.

'Thy oil, farther inspired by evaporation, turns by degrees into balm. Auribunt.

INSPISSATION. n. f. [from inspire.] The act of making any liquid thick.

The effect is wrought by the inspiration of the air. Bacon.
Recent urine will crystallize by inspiration, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Auribunt.

INSTABILITY. n. f. [instabilitas, from instabilis, French; instabilitas, Lat.] Inconstancy; fickleness; mutability of opinion or conduct.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another; since such a fickleness cannot but be fatal to our country. Addison's Freeholder.

INSTABLE. adj. [instabilis, Lat.] Inconstant; changing. See UNSTABLE.

To INSTALL. v. a. [install, French; in and stall.] To advance to any rank or office, by placing in the seat or stall proper to that condition.

To make lord William Hastings of our mind,
For the installment of this noble duke
In the seat royal. Shakespeare.

2. The seat in which one is installed.

Search Windsor-castle, elves,
The several chairs of order look you four;
Each fair installment, coat and several crest
With royal blazon evermore be blest! Shakespeare.

INSTANCE. n. f. [instance, French.]

INSTANCY. n. f. [instance, French.]

1. Importunity; urgency; solicitation.

Christian men should much better frame themselves to those heavenly precepts which our Lord and Saviour with so great instance gave us concerning peace and unity, if we did concur to have the ancient councils renewed. Hosier.

2. Motive; influence; pressing argument. Not now in use.

She dwells so securely upon her honour, that folly dares not present itself. Now, could I come to her with any direction in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves. Shakespeare.

The instance that second marriage move,
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love. Shakespeare.

3. Prosecution or process of a suit.

The instance of a cause is said to be that judicial process which is made from the contestation of a suit, even to the time of pronouncing sentence in the cause, or till the end of three years. Ayliffe.

4. Example; document.

Yet doth this accident
So far exceed all instance, all discourse,
That I am ready to distrust mine eyes. Shakespeare.

In furnaces of copper and brass, where virgins is often cast in, there riseth suddenly a fly, which sometimes moveth on the walls of the furnace; sometimes in the fire below; and dieth presently as soon as it is out of the furnace: which is a noble instance, and worthy to be weighed. Bacon.

We find in history instances of persons, who, after their prisons have been flung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons, than stake their miserable lives and fortunes upon the success of a revolution. Addison.

The greatest saints are sometimes made the most miserable instance of suffering.

Suppose the earth should be removed nearer to the sun, and revolve, for instance, in the orbit of Mercury, the whole ocean would boil with heat.

The use of instance is to illustrate and explain a thing; and this end is best answered by such instances as are apt to be common.

5. State of any thing.

These seem as if, in the time of Edward the first, they were drawn up into the form of a law in the first instance. Hale.

6. Occasion; act.

The performances required on our part, are no other than what natural reason has endeavoured to recommend, even in the most severe and difficult instances of duty. Locke.

To INSTANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To give an instance as example.

As to false citations, that the world may see how little it is to be trusted, I shall instance in two or three, about which he makes the loudest clamor.

In tragedy and satire, this age and the last have called the ancients; and I would instance in Shakespeare of the former, in Dorset of the latter sort. Boyle.

INSTANT. adj. [instant, Fr. instant, Latin.]

Nor native country thou, nor friend shall see;
Nor war hast thou to wage, nor year to come;

Impending death is thine, and instant doom. Milton.

3. Quick; without delay.

Instant without disturb they took alarm.
Grief'd that a visitant so long should wait

Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate;
Instant he flew with hospitable haste,

And the new friend with courteous air embrac'd. Pope.

INSTANT. n. f. [instant, French.]

1. Instant is such a part of duration wherein we perceive no succession.

There is scarce an instant between their instant and their not being.

I can at any unreasonable instant of the night go to her to look out at her lady's chamber window.

Her nimble body yet in time must move,
And not in instants through all places slide;

But she is high and far, beneath, above,
In point of time, which thought cannot divide. Deane.

At any instant of time the moving atom is but in no definite point of the line; therefore all but that one point is either future or past, and no other parts are co-existent or contemporaneous with it.

2. It is used in law and common language for a day or its present or current month.

On the twentieth instant it is my intention to end a new head.

2. To trample upon; to triumph over.

It pleas'd the king his master very lately

To strike at me upon his misconstruction;

When he conjunct, and flatt'ring his displeasure,

Tript me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,

And put upon him such a deal of man,

That worthied him. Shakespeare.

So 'scapes the insulting fire his narrow jail,

And makes small outlets into open air. Dryden.

Ev'n when they sing at ease in full content,

Insulting e'er the toil they underwent,

Yet still they find a future task remain,

To turn the soil. Dryden.

INSULTER. n. f. [from insult.] One who treats another with insolent triumph.

Ev'n man, the mercilefs insulter man,

Man, who rejoices in our sex's weakness,

Shall pity thee. Rew.

INSULTINGLY. adv. [from insulting.] With contemptuous triumph.

Insultingly, he made your love his boast,

Gave me my life, and told me what it cost. Dryden.

INSUPERABILITY. n. f. [from insuperable.] The quality of being invincible.

INSUPERABLE. adj. [insuperabilis, Latin.] Invincible; insurmountable; not to be conquered; not to be overcome.

This appears to be an insuperable objection, because of the evidence that sense seems to give it. Digby.

Much might be done would we but endeavour; nothing is insuperable to pains and patience. Ray.

And middle natures how they love to join,

Yet never pass th' insuperable line. Pope.

INTELLECTIVE. adj. [intellectif, Fr. from intellectus.] Having power to understand.

If a man as intellective be created, then either he means the whole man, or only that by which he is intellective. Glanville.

INTELLECTUAL. adj. [intellectuel, French; intellectualis, low Latin.]

1. Relating to the understanding; belonging to the mind; subsisting by the understanding.

Religion teaches us to present to God our bodies as well as our souls: if the body serves the soul in actions natural and civil, and intellectual, it must not be cafed in the only offices of religion. Taylor.

2. Mental; comprising the faculty of understanding; belonging to the mind.

Logic is to teach us the right use of our reason, or intellectual powers. Watts.

3. Ideal; perceived by the intellect, not the senses.

In a dark vision's intellectual scene,
Beneath a bow'n for sorrow made,
The melancholy Cowley lay.

A train of phantoms in wild order rose,
And, join'd, this intellectual scene compose. Cowley.

4. Having the power of understanding.

Anaxagoras and Plato term the maker of the world an intellectual worker.

Who would lofe,
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts that wander through eternity,
To perish rather, swallow'd up and lost,
In the wide womb of uncreated night,
Devoid of sense and motion? Milton.

5. Propos'd as the object not of the senses but intellect: as, Intellect.
Cudworth names his book the intellectual system of the universe.

INTELLECTUAL. n. f. Intellect; understanding; mental powers or faculties. This is little in use.

Her husband not nigh,
Whose higher intellectual more I than.

The fancies of most, like the index of a clock, are moved but by the inward springs of the corporeal machine; which, even on the most sublimed intellectual, is dangerously influential. Milton.

I have not consulted the repute of my intellectual in being their weaknesses into each differing perception. Glanville.
INTELLIGENCE. n. f. [intelligence, French; intelligencia, Lat.]

1. Commerce of information; notice; mutual communication; account of things distant or secret.

A mankind witch! hence with her, out of doubt!
A most intelligence bawd!

He furnished his offering men liberally with money to draw on and reward intelligences; giving them also authority to advertise continually what they found. Shakespeare.

The advertisements of neighbour princes are always to be regarded, for that they receive intelligence from some nation than persons of inferior note. Shakespeare.

Let all the passages
Be well secur'd, that no intelligence

May pass between the prince and them. Devin.

Those tales had been fung to lull children asleep, were ever Hierosus set up his intelligence office at Coon. Devin.

2. Commerce of acquaintance; terms on which one can be with another.

Factionous followers are worse to be liked, which follow us upon affection to him with whom they range themselves; whereupon commonly ensue that ill intelligence that we see between great personages. Bacon.

He lived rather in a faint intelligence than any friendship with the favourites. Glanville.

3. Spirit; unbounded mind.

How fully thou hast satisfied me, pure
Intelligence of heav'n, angel!

There are divers ranks of created beings intermediate between the glorious God and man, as the glorious angels created intelligences. Milton.

They hoped to get the favour of the hoards, and by the favour of the hoards they hoped for that of the intelligences, and by their favour for that of the supreme God. Milton.

The regularity of motion, visible in the great train and curiosity of bodies, is a demonstration that the whole train of matter is under the conduct of a mighty intelligence. Glanville.

Satan, appearing like a cherub to Uriel, the intelligence of the sun, circumvented him even in his own province. Devin.

4. Understanding; skill.

Heaps of huge words, up hoarded hidiously,
They think to be chief praise of poetry;

And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of godly poesy. Bentley.

INTELLIGENCER. n. f. [from intelligence.] One who knows or conveys news; one who gives notice of private or distant transactions; one who carries messages between persons.

His eyes, being his diligent intelligencers, could carry him no other news, but discomfortable. Shakespeare.

Who hath not heard it spoken
How deep you were within the books of heav'n's

To us, th' imagin'd voice of heav'n's self,
The very opener and intelligencer

Between the grace and faculties of heav'n,
And our dull workings. Shakespeare.

If they had instructions to that purpose, they might be the best intelligencers to the king of the true state of his own kingdom. Bacon.

They are the best sort of intelligencers, for they have a way into the inmost closets of princes.

They have news-gatherers and intelligencers, who make them acquainted with the conversation of the whole kingdom. Shakespeare.

INTELLIGENT. adj. [intelligent, Fr. intelligens, Latin.]

The fall of many kings.

Shakespeare.

Another law of Lycurgus induced to intemperance and all kind of incontinency.

Hobbes.

Some, as thou wast, by violent stroke shall die;

By fire, flood, famine, by intemperance more

In meats and drinks, which on the earth shall bring

Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew

Before thee shall appear; that thou may'st know

What misery th' inabundance of Eve

Shall bring on men.

Milton.

The Lacedaemonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness and intemperance, by bringing a drunken man into their company.

Watts.

INTERMEDIATE. adj. [intermediatus, Fr. intermediatus, Latin.]

1. Immoderate in appetite; excessive in meat or drink; drunken; gluttonous.

More women should die than men, if the number of burials answered in proportion to that of sickness; but men, being more intermediate than women, die as much by reason of their vice, as women do by the infirmity of their sex.

Gouart.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, and those unanswerable doubts, which, over their cups or their coffee, they pretend to have against Christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to defy his money, the intermediate man to abandon his revels, and I dare undertake that all their giant-like objections shall vanish.

Smith.

N° LXXVII.

Milton.

Looks intervene, and timids.
Ethereal danger of an action, and the possibilities of miscarriage, and every cross accident that can intervene, to be either a mercy on God's part, or a fault on ours.

Taylor.

INTERVENE. n. f. [from the verb.] Opposition, or perhaps interview. A word out of use.

They had some sharper and some milder differences, which might easily happen in such an intervene of grandees, both vehement on the parts which they wayed.

Watson.

INTERVENIENT. adj. [interveniens, Lat. intervenire, French.] Interceding; interposed; passing between.

There be interveniens in the rise of eight, in tones, two bemolls or flat notes.

Bacon.

Many arts were used to discuss new affection: all which notwithstanding, for I omit things interveniens, there is conveyed to Mr. Villiers an intimation of the king's pleasure to be known his servant.

Watson.

INTERVENTION. n. f. [intervention, Fr. intervenire, Latin.] Agency between persons.

God will judge the world in righteousness by the intervention of the man Christ Jesus, who is the Saviour as well as the judge of the world.

Alc.bury.

2. Agency between antecedents and consequents.

In the dispensation of God's mercies to the world, some things he does by himself, others by the intervention of natural means, and of the mediation of such instruments as he has appointed.

L'Estrange.

3. Interposition; the state of being interposed.

Sound is shut out by the intervention of that lax membrane, and not suffered to pass into the inward ear.

Haller.

TO INTERVERT. v. a. [intervenire, Lat.] To turn to another course.

The duke interverted the bargain, and gave the poor widow of Epernius for the books five hundred pounds.

Watson.

INTERVIEW. n. f. [interview, French.] Mutual sight; sight of each other. It is commonly used for a formal and appointed meeting or conference.

The day will come, when the passions of former enmity being allayed, we shall with ten times redoubled tokens of reconciled love throw ourselves each towards other the same, which Joseph and the brethren of Joseph were at the time of their interview in Egypt.

Hosier.

His fears were, that the interview betwixt England and France might, through their amity, Breed him some prejudice.

Shakespeare.

Such happy interviews, and fair event
Of love, and youth not loth, songs, garlands, flow'rs,
And charming symphonies, attach'd the heart
Of Adam.

Milton.

TO INTERVOLVE. v. a. [intervenire, Latin.] To involve one within another.

Mythical dancel which yonder starry sphere
Of planets, and of fix'd, in all her wheels
Rembles nearest mazes intricate,
Eccentric, intervolv'd, yet regular,
Then most, when most irregular they seem.

Milton.

TO INTERWEAVE. v. a. pret. interweave, part. pass. interwoven, interwove, or interwoven. [inter and weave.] To mix one with another in a regular texture; to intermingle.

Then had him down

Under the hospitable covert nigh
Of trees thick interwoven.

Milton.

At last
Words interwove with sighs found out their way.

Milton.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy copied, and interwove
With bounding honey-luckie.

Milton.

None
Can fay her nature ends, and art begins,
But mix like th' elements, and born like twins,

Nº LXXVII.

So interwov'd, so like, so much the same:

None, this more nature, that mere art can name. Drom.

The proud theatres disclose the scene,

Which interwoven Britons seem to raise,

And show the triumph which their shame displays. Dryd.

He fo interweaves truth with probable fiction, that he puts a pleasing fallacy upon us.

Dryden.

It appeared a vast ocean planted with islands, that were covered with fruits and flowers, and interwoven with a thousand little shining seas that ran among them.

Adisson.

It is a confusion of kitchen and parterre, orchard and flower-garden, which lie fo mixt and interwoven with one another, as to look like a natural wilderness.

Spectator.

The Supreme Infinite could not make intelligent creatures, without implanting in their natures a most ardent desire, interwoven in the substance of their spiritual natures, of being reunited with himself.

Chyce.

I do not altogether disapprove the interweaving texts of scripture through the style of your fermion.

Swift.

TO INTERMIX. v. a. [inter and mix.] To mix mutually to each other.

The venom of all stepdames, gamester's gall,
What tyrants and their subjects mix intermix,
All ill fall on that man.

Denn.

INTERSTATE. adj. [interstabilis, Latin.] Disqualified to make a will.

A person excommunicated is rendered infamous and interstabile both actively and passively.

Asyl.

INTERSTATE. adj. [interstabilis, Latin.] Wanting a will; dying without will.

Why should calamity be full of words?

—Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Airs successors of interstate joys,
Poor breathing orators of miseries.

Shakespeare.

Potent punishment pursues his maw,
When surfeited and swell'd, the peacock raw,
He bears into the bath; whence want of breath,
Repletions, apoplex, interstate death.

Dryden.

INTERSTITIAL. adj. [interstitium, Fr. from interstium.] Belonging to the guts.

The mouths of the lacteals are opened by the interstitial tube, affecting a straight instead of a spiral cylinder.

Arist.

INTERSTINE. adj. [interstium, Fr. interstium, Latin.]

1. Internal; inward; not external.

Of these inward and interstine enemies to prayer, there are our past sins to wound us, our present cares to distract us, our disordered passions to disorder us, and a whole swarm of loose and floating imaginations to molest us.

Duffie.

Interstine war no more our passions wage,
Ev'n giddy factions hear away their rage.

Pope.

2. Contained in the body.

Interstine stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs,
And moon-struck madrels.

Milton.

A wooden jack, which had almost Lost, by disease, the art to roast,
A sudden alteration feels,
Increases by new interstine wheels.

Swift.

3. Domestick, not foreign. I know not whether the word be properly used in the following example of Shakespeare: perhaps for mortal and interstine should be read mortal interstine.

Arbut.

Since the mortal and interstine jars
Twixt thy felicitous countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
To admit no traffick to our adverse towns.

Shakespeare.

But God, or Nature, while they thus contend,
To their interstine discords put an end.

Dryden.

She saw her sons with purple deaths expire,
A dreadful series of interstine wars,
Inglorious triumphs, and dishonour'd scars.

Pope.

INTERSTINE. n. f. [interstium, Lat. interstine, Fr.] The gut; the bowel: most commonly without a singular.

The interstine or guts may be inflamed by an acrid substance taken inwardly.

Arbut.

TO INTIRALL. v. a. [in and thral.] To enslave; to thackle; to reduce to servitude. A word now seldom used, at least in prose.

Arbut.

What though I be interstine, he seems a knight,
And will not any way diminish me.

Shakespeare.

The Turk has sought to extinguish the ancient memory of those people which he has subjected and interstine.

Rail.

Authors to themselves in all
Both what they judge, and what they choose; for so
I form'd them trees, and free they must remain
Till they interstine themselves.

Milton.

She too lies, but never can interstine my mind:
Why may not peace and love for once be join'd?

Prior.

INTIRALMENT. n. f. [in and thral.] Servitude; slavery.

Arbut.

Moses and Aaron, sent from God to claim
His people from intirament, they return
With glory, and spoil, back to their promis'd land.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

12 P

To INTHRO'NE. v. a. [in and thronē.] To raise to royalty; to seat on a throne.

One, chief, in gracious dignity intron'd,
Shines o'er the rest. Thomson.

INTIMACY. n. f. [from intimate.] Close familiarity.

It is in our power to confine our friendships and intimacies to men of virtue. Regart.

INTIMATE. adj. [intimado, Spanish; intimus, Lat.]

1. Inmost; inward; intimate.

They knew not

That what I mention'd was of God, I knew

From intimate impulse, and therefore urged on

The marriage. Milton.

Fear being intimate to our natures, it is the strongest bond of laws. Tillotson.

2. Near; not kept at distance.

Moses was with him in the retirements of the mount, received his private instructions; and when the multitude were thundered away from any approach, he was honoured with an intimate and immediate admission. South.

3. Familiar; closely acquainted.

United by this sympathetick bond,

You grow familiar, intimate, and fond. Roscommon.

INTIMATE. n. f. [intimado, Spanish; intime, French; intimus, Latin.] A familiar friend; one who is trusted with our thoughts.

The design was to entertain his reason with a more equal converse, align him an intimate whose intellect as much corresponded with his as did the outward form. Gov. Tongue.

To INTIMATE. v. a. [intimer, French; intimare, low Latin.] To hint; to point out indirectly, or not very plainly.

Alexander Van Suchten tells us, that by a way he intimates, may be made a mercury of copper, not of the silver colour of other mercuries, but green. Boyle.

The names of simple ideas and substances, with the abstract ideas in the mind, intimate some real existence, from which was derived their original pattern. Locke.

'Tis the divinity that sits within us;

'Tis heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,

And intimates eternity to man. Addison.

INTIMATELY. adv. [from intimate.]

1. Closely; with intimacy of parts.

The same economy is observed in the circulation of the chyle, with the blood, by mixing it intimately with the parts of the fluid to which it is to be assimilated. Arbutnot.

2. Nearly; inseparably.

Quality, as it regards the mind, has its rise from knowledge and virtue, and is that which is more essential to us, and more intimately united with us. Addison.

3. Familiarly; with close friendship.

INTIMATION. n. f. [intimation, Fr. from intimate.] Hint; obscure or indirect declaration or direction.

Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and intimations; the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in his heart. South's Sermons.

Of those that are only probable we have some reasonable intimations, but not a demonstrative certainty. Hewson's d.

Besides the more solid parts of learning, there are several little intimations; to be met with on medals. Addison.

INTIME. adj. Inward; being within the mass; not being external, or on the surface; internal.

As to the composition or dissolution of mixed bodies, which is the chief work of elements, and requires an intime application of the agents, water bath the principality and excess over earth. Digby on Phlog.

To INTIMIDATE. v. a. [intimidare, French; in and timidus, Lat.] To make fearful; to daunt; to make cowardly.

Now guilt once harbour'd in the conscious breast,

Intimidates the brave, degrades the great. Irms.

INTIRE. adj. [intire, Lat. entire, French; better written entire, which see, and all its derivatives.] Whole; undiminished; unbroken.

The lawful power of making laws, to command whole politic societies of men, belongeth so properly unto the same entire societies, that for any prince to exercise the same of himself, and not either by express commission immediately and personally received from God, or else by authority derived at the first from their consent upon whose persons he imposes laws, it is no better than mere tyranny. Haller.

INTRINSECS. n. f. [from intire; better entireness.] Wholeness; integrity.

So shall all times find me the same:

You this intrinsec better may fulfil,

Who have the pattern with you fill. Dennis.

INTRO. prep. [in and to.]

1. Noting entrance with regard to place.

If iron will acquire by mere continuance an habitual inclination to the fire it held, how much more may education, being a constant plight and inurement, induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature. Wotton.

To give life to that which has yet no being, is to frame a living creature, fashion the parts, and having fitted them together, to put into them a living soul.

Water introduces into vegetables the matter it bears along with it. Lin.

Acrid substances, which pass into the capillary tubes, irritate them into greater contraction. Hall.

2. Noting penetration beyond the outside, or some action which reaches beyond the superficies or open part.

To look into letters already opened or divulged is held as a generous act.

3. Noting a new state to which any thing is brought by the agency of a cause.

They have denominated some herbs solar and lunar, and such like toys put into great words.

Compound bodies may be resolved into their simple parts, than such as they are divided into by the fire. B.

A man must in himself into a love of other men, for a bare notion of this black art will not carry him far. Locke.

Sure thou art born to some peculiar fate,
When the mad people rise against the state,

To look them into duty; and command
An awful silence with thy lifted hand. Drake.

It concerns every man that would not ride over his head, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the great scruples to enquire into these matters. Locke.

He is not a frail being, that he should be first so complacence by the force of all-wise application. Locke.

In hollow bottoms, if any fountain chance to run, are naturally spread themselves into lakes, before they can be an issue. Locke.

It would have been all irretrievably lost, were it not means collected and brought into one mass. Locke.

Why are these positions charged upon me in a treatise, and the reader led into a belief, that they were before maintained by any person of virtue. Locke.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be so frightening and astonishing men into an acknowledgement of the truth, who were made to be wrought upon by evidence. Locke.

A man may whore and drink himself into attention; it is impossible he should think himself into it. Locke.

INTOLERABLE. adj. [intolerabilis, Lat. intolerabilis, Fr.]

1. Insufferable; not to be endured; not to be borne; any quality in a degree too powerful to be endured.

If we bring into one day's thoughts the evil of man, certain and uncertain, what will be and what will not be, the load will be as intolerable as it is uncalculable. Locke.

His awful preference did the crowd surprise,
Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;

Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly sway,
So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day. Drake.

Some men are quickly weary of one thing; the line of long continued in is as intolerable to them, as the opposite long in the same clothes is to a court lady. Locke.

From Param's top the Almighty rode,
Intolerable day proclaim'd the God. Locke.

2. Bad beyond endurance.

INTOLERABLENESS. n. f. [from intolerable.] Quality of a thing not to be endured.

INTOLERABLY. adv. [from intolerable.] To a degree of bad endurance.

INTOLERANT. adj. [intolant, French.] Not enduring; not able to endure.

Too great moisture affects human bodies with one kind of diseases, and too great dryness with another; the power of human bodies being limited and intolerant of excess. Locke.

To INTO'NS. v. a. [in and tomb.] To include in a sacred monument; to bury.

What commandment finally had they for the ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead, after which odours notwithstanding our Lord was contented that his own precious blood should be intombed. Locke.

Isn't his predominance or the day's flame,
That darkness does the face of earth entomb. Shelley.

Mighty hero's more majestic shades,
And youths intombed before their father's eyes. Drake.

To INTONATE. v. a. [intonare, Lat.] To thunder.

INTONATION. n. f. [intonation, Fr. from intonare.] The act of thundering.

To INTONE. v. n. [from intone, or rather from intone, French.] To make a flow protracted note.

So swells each wind-pipe; and all men to ads Harmonious twang. Locke.

To INTORT. v. a. [intortus, Lat.] To twist; to wind; to wring.

The brain is a congeries of glands, that figure diverse parts of the blood, called animal spirits; and a gland into but a canal variously intorted and wound up together. Locke.

With reverent hand the king presents the globe,
Which round the intorted horns the glistered. Locke.

TO INTOXICATE. v. a. [in and toxicum, Latin.] To inebriate; to make drunk.

The more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicates; and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding than in the virtues of the will and affections. Bacon.

As with new wine intoxicated both,

They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel
Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton.

My early mistle, now my ancient muse,
That throng Circian liquor cease to infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth. Denham.

What part of wild fury was there in the bacchanals which we have not seen equal'd, if not exceeded by some intoxicated zealots? De la Fayette.

Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an earnest desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived. D. J. J.

Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors, having quite different qualities from the plant itself; for no fruit takes crude but the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbuth.

INTOXICATION. n. f. [from intoxicare.] Inebriation; ebriety; the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk. Arbuth.

That king, being in amity with him, did to burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Perkin's intoxication, who was every where else detected. Bacon.

Whence can this proceed, but from that belating intoxication which verbal magic brings upon the mind. South.

INTRACTABLE. adj. [intra habilis, Lat. intractabilis, Fr.]

1. Ungovernable; violent; stubborn; obdurate.
To love them who love us is to natural a passion, that even the most intractable tempers obey its force. Rogers.

2. Unmanageable; furious.
By what means ferpents, and other noxious and more intractable kinds, as well as the more innocent and useful, get together. Woodward.

INTRACTABLENESS. n. f. [from intractabilis.] Obstinacy; perverseness.

INTRACTABLY. adv. [from intractabilis.] Unmanageably; stubbornly.

INTRANQUILITY. n. f. [in and tranquillitas.] Unquietness; want of rest.

Jaculations were used for amusement, and allay in constant pains, and to relieve that intranquility which makes men impatient of lying in their beds. Temple.

INTRASINATIVE. adj. [intransitivus, Latin.]

[In grammar.] A verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object; as, cursus, I run. Clarke.

INTRAMUTABLE. adj. [in and transmutabilis.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intransmutable, and therefore call it liquor æternus. Ray.

TO INTREASURE. v. a. [in and treasure.] To lay up as in a treasure.

There is a history in all mens lives,

Figuring the nature of the times decays'd;

The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,

With a near aim, of the main chance of things

As yet not come to life, which in their seeds

And weak beginnings he intresures. Shakespeare.

TO INTREACH. v. a. [in and trans, French.]

1. To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another.

Little I desire my scepter should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences. K. Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,

Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!

Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,

Intrench on love, my great prerogative. Dryden.

We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children. Lack.

2. To break with hollows.

His face

Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care

Sat on his faded cheek. Milton.

3. To fortify with a trench: as, the allies were intrenched in their camp.

INTRECHANT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained by one of its editors: The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which had passed through it. Hannay. I believe Shakespeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trancher, to cut;

intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air

With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed. Shakespeare.

INTRENCHMENT. n. f. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.

INTREPID. adj. [intrepidus, Fr. intrepidus, Latin.] Fearless; daring; bold; brave.

Argyle

Calm and intrepid in the very throat

Of sulphurous war, on Tenier's dreadful field. Thomson.

INTREPIDITY. n. f. [intrepidus, Fr.] Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling. Swift.

INTREPIDLY. adv. [from intrepidus.] Fearlessly; boldly; dauntingly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.

INTRICACY. n. f. [from intricare.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour. Johnson.

INTRICA. E. adj. [intricatus, Lat.] Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hobbes.

His stile in writing was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Milford.

TO INTRICATE. v. a. [from the adj. intricare.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, ver in use.

Alterations of humours have to intricated, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Comden.

INTRICATELY. adv. [from intricare.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity.

That variety of fictions, into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this dilemma. Swift.

INTRICATENESS. n. f. [from intricare.] Perplexity; involution; obscurity.

He found such intricateness that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.

INTRIGUE. n. f. [intrigue, French.]

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged: usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man,
These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires. Flam.

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. Johnson.

The hero of a comedy is represented vicious in all his intrigues. Swift.

Now love is dwindled to intrigue. Swift.

And marriage grown a money league. Swift.

2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.

I though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us. Hale.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artificial involution of feigned transaction.

As these causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem. Pope.

TO INTRIGUE. v. n. [intrigue, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs.

INTRIGUER. n. f. [intrigueur, Fr. from intrigue.] One who busies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

I define that intriguer will not make a pimp of my lion, and convey their thoughts to one another. Johnson.

INTRIGUOUSLY. adv. [from intrigue.] With intrigue; with secret plotting.

INTRINSICAL. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat. intrinsecus, French.]

This word is now generally written intrinsecal, contrarily to etymology.]

1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.

These measure the laws of God not by the intrinsecal goodness and equity of them, but by reluctance and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them. Tillotson.

The near and intrinsecal, and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself. Beaumont.

2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use.

He falls into intrinsecal society with Sir John Graham, who dissuaded him from marriage, and gave him rather encouragement to woo fortune in court. Wotton.

Sir Fulk Greville was a man in appearance intrinsecal with him, or at least admitted to his melancholy hours. Wotton.

INTRINSICALLY. adv. [from intrinsecal.]

1. Internally; naturally; really.

A lye is a thing absolutely and intrinsically evil. South.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsically and solidly valuable. Prior.

2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open alteration; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought intrinsically. Watson.

If once bereaved of motion, it cannot of itself acquire it again; nor till it be thrust by some other body from without, or intrinsically moved by an immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it. Brady.

INTRINSICK. adj. [intrinsecus, Latin.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.

Intrinsecal goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed. Hammond.

2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing. The difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that is, a man's intrinsecal this, his current value. Grew.

His fame, like gold, the more 'tis try'd, The more shall its intrinsecal worth proclaim. Prior.

Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsecal value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder. Rogers.

INTRINSICATE. adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intrica and intrinsecal.] Perplexed; entangled.

Such smiling rogues as these,

Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain

Too intrinsecate to unloose. Shakespeare.

Come, mortal wretch,

With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsecate

Of life at once untie. Shakespeare.

To INTRODUCE. v. a. [introducere, Lat. introducere, Fr.]

1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person. Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of infinity. Locke.

2. To bring something into notice or practice. This vulgar error whosoever is able to reclaim, he shall introduce a new way of cure, preferring by theory as well as practice. Brown.

An author who should introduce a sport of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause. Brown.

3. To produce; to give occasion. Whatsoever introduces habits in children, deserves the care and attention of their governors. Locke.

4. To bring into writing or discourse by proper preparatives. INTRODUCTER. n. f. [introducitur, Fr. from introduce.]

1. One who conducts another to a place or person.

2. Any one who brings any thing into practice or notice. The beginning of the Earl of Essex I must attribute to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Watson.

It is commonly charged upon the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess, hath been lately, from their example, reformed among us; but whoever the introducers were, they have succeeded to a miracle. Swift.

INTRODUCTION. n. f. [introduction, Fr. introducere, Latin.]

1. The act of conducting or ushering to any place or person; the state of being ushered or conducted.

2. The act of bringing any new thing into notice or practice. The archbishop of Canterbury had pursued the introduction of the liturgy and the canons into Scotland with great vehemence. Clarendon.

3. The preface or part of a book containing previous matter. INTRODUCTIVE. adj. [introdutivus, French; from introduce.]

Serving as the means to something else. The truths of Christ crucified, is the Christian's philosophy, and a good life is the Christian's logic; that great instrumental introduction art, that must guide the mind into the former. South.

INTRODUCTORY. adj. [from introduce, Latin.] Previous; serving as a means to something further.

This introductionary discourse itself is to be but an essay, not a book. Boyle.

INTRODUCTION. n. f. [introduction, Latin.] Entrance; the act of entering.

INTROIT. n. f. [introduction, French.] The beginning of the mass; the beginning of public devotions.

INTROIT. n. f. [introduction, Latin.]

1. The act of sending in.

If fight be caused by introduction, or receiving in the form of that which is seen, contrary species or forms should be received confusedly together, which Aristotle shews to be absurd. Peacock.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged by the chief factors for a general introduction of all sects and persuasions into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obdurate, and will not submit to the rules of our church, and that therefore they should be taken away. South.

2. [In the Scottish law.] The act of intermeddling with another's effects; as, he shall be brought to an account for his introduction with such an estate. Black.

To INTROMITT. v. a. [intromittit, Latin.] To send in; to let in; to admit; to allow to enter; to be the medium by which any thing enters. Black.

INTROSPECTION. n. f. [from introspect.] A view of the inside.

The actions of the mind or imagination itself, by way of reflection or introspection of themselves, are caused by man. Black.

I was forced to make an introspection into my conscience, and into that idea of beauty which I have formed in my own imagination. Black.

INTROVENT. adj. [intro and venio, Latin.] Entering; coming in.

Scarcely any condition which is not exhausted and exhausted, from the commixture of introvent motion, either by violence or conquest. Black.

To INTRUDE. v. n. [intrude, Latin.]

1. To come in unwelcome by a kind of violence; to enter without invitation or permission.

Thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd. Shakespeare.

The Jewish religion was yet in politics in; and therefore this might be enter, as not to intrude, it was to bring to naught from the same hand of omnipotence. Black.

Forgive me, fair one, if officious friendship intrudes on your repose, and comes that late

'I greet you with the tidings of success. Shakespeare.

Some thoughts rise and intrude upon us, while we sleep them; others fly from us, when we would hold them. Black.

2. To encroach; to force in uncalled or unpermitted. Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, intruding into those things which he hath not seen by his bodily sense. Galatians.

To INTRUDE. v. a. To force without right or welcome.

Not to intrude one's self into the mysteries of government, which the prince keeps secret, is represented by the words up in a bull-hic, which the companions of Ulysses would needs be so foolish as to pry into. Black.

INTRUDER. n. f. [from intrude.] One who forces his way into company or affairs without right or welcome.

And the hounds Should drive upon the new transformed limbs, Unmannerly intruder as thou art! Shakespeare.

Go, bale intruder! over-weaning slave! Below thy fawning smiles on equal masters. Shakespeare.

They were but intruders upon the position, say the minority of the herd: they knew those laws were the rightful inheritance of that young lady. Black.

Will you, a bold intruder, never learn To know your baldest, and your bread alien? Black.

She had seen a great variety of faces: they were all intruders and intruders, such as she had no acquaintance with. Black.

The whole fraternity of writers rise in arms against every new intruder into the world of fame. Black.

INTRUSION. n. f. [intrusion, French; intrudere, Latin.]

1. The act of thrusting or forcing any thing or person into any place or state.

It must raise more substantial superfluities, and fill you very many excellent strains, which have been just set by the intrusions of poetical fictions. Black.

The separation of the parts of one body, upon the intrusion of another, and the change from rest to motion upon intrusion, and the like, seem to have some connection. Black.

2. Encroachment upon any person or place; unwelcome entrance; entrance without invitation or permission.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something emboldened me to this intrusion; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open. Shakespeare.

Frogs, lice, and flies, must all his palace fill With loath'd intrusion. Black.

How's this, my son? Why this intrusion? Were not my orders that I should be private? Black.

I may close, after so long an intrusion upon your notice. Black.

3. Voluntary and uncalled undertaking of any thing. It will be said, I handle an art no way suitable either to my employment or fortune, and to stand charged with intrusion and impertinency. Black.

To INTRUST. v. a. [in and trust.] To trust with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value. Black.

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner that none of the duke's officers were intrusted with the knowledge of it.

Receive my counsel, and securely move;

Intreat thy fortune to the pow'r's above;

Are not the lives of thrice, who draw the sword

In Rome's defence, intusa to our care?

He composed his bullet-sown, and at the time appointed went to intrust it to the hands of his confidant.

INTUITION. n. f. [intuitus, intueri, Latin.]

1. Sight of any thing; immediate knowledge. Used commonly of mental view.

At our rate of judging, St. Paul had surely passed for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God saw he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that intuition had mercy on him.

Government of the Tongue.

The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident.

2. Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object. All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the causality itself is inferrible.

Discourse was then almost as quick as intuition.

He tried single virtues did survey,

By intuition in his own large breast.

INTUITIVE. adj. [intuitiva, low Latin; intuitif, French.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without any intervention of reason. Immediate perception of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge.

Those lofty flights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstruse notions, those exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see existent in one and the same person.

2. Seeing, not barely believing. Faith, beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come.

3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination. The rule of ghostly or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgment, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unfeignable joy and delight, doth set them on work.

The soul receives

Discursive or intuitive.

INTUITIVE. adv. [intuitivemēt, French.] Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception. That our love is found and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saving only the searcher of all mens hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his.

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps.

INTUMESCENCE. n. f. [intumescens, French; intumesco, Lat.] INTUMESCENCY. n. f. Swell; tumour; the act or state of swelling. According to the temper of the terrous parts at the bottom, as they are more hardy or easily moved, they variously begin, continue, or end their intumescencies.

This subterranean heat causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions, and at the same time making the like effort upon the earth, occasions an earthquake.

INTURGESCENCE. n. f. [in and turgescis, Latin.] Swelling; the act or state of swelling. Not by attenuation of the upper part of the sea, but inturgescencies caused first at the bottom, and carrying the upper part of it before them.

INTUS. n. f. [intus, Latin.] Bruise. TO INTWINE. v. a. [in and twine.]

1. To twill, or wreath together. This opinion, though false, yet intwined with a true, that the souls of men do never perish, abated the fear of death in them.

2. To encompass by circling round it. The vest and veil divine, Which warring foliage and rich flow'r's intwine.

INVADE. v. a. [invado, Latin.] 1. To attack a country; to make an hostile entrance. He will invade them with troops. Should he in ade any part of their country, he would soon see that nation up in arms.

With dangerous expedition they invade Heaven's, whose high walls fear no assault.

Thy race in times to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;

Rome, whose ascending tow'r's shall heav'n invade,

Involving earth and ocean in her shade.

INVADE. v. a. [invado, Latin.] 1. To attack a country; to make an hostile entrance. He will invade them with troops. Should he in ade any part of their country, he would soon see that nation up in arms.

With dangerous expedition they invade Heaven's, whose high walls fear no assault.

Thy race in times to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;

Rome, whose ascending tow'r's shall heav'n invade,

Involving earth and ocean in her shade.

INVADE. v. a. [invado, Latin.] 1. To attack a country; to make an hostile entrance. He will invade them with troops. Should he in ade any part of their country, he would soon see that nation up in arms.

With dangerous expedition they invade Heaven's, whose high walls fear no assault.

Thy race in times to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;

Rome, whose ascending tow'r's shall heav'n invade,

Involving earth and ocean in her shade.

INVADE. v. a. [invado, Latin.] 1. To attack a country; to make an hostile entrance. He will invade them with troops. Should he in ade any part of their country, he would soon see that nation up in arms.

With dangerous expedition they invade Heaven's, whose high walls fear no assault.

Thy race in times to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;

Rome, whose ascending tow'r's shall heav'n invade,

Involving earth and ocean in her shade.

INVADE. v. a. [invado, Latin.] 1. To attack a country; to make an hostile entrance. He will invade them with troops. Should he in ade any part of their country, he would soon see that nation up in arms.

With dangerous expedition they invade Heaven's, whose high walls fear no assault.

Thy race in times to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;

Rome, whose ascending tow'r's shall heav'n invade,

Involving earth and ocean in her shade.

INVADE. v. a. [invado, Latin.] 1. To attack a country; to make an hostile entrance. He will invade them with troops. Should he in ade any part of their country, he would soon see that nation up in arms.

With dangerous expedition they invade Heaven's, whose high walls fear no assault.

Thy race in times to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;

Rome, whose ascending tow'r's shall heav'n invade,

Involving earth and ocean in her shade.

Encouraged with success, he invades the province of philosophy.

In vain did nature's wife command

Divide the waters from the land,

If daring ships, and men prophane,

In ade th' inviolable main.

2. To attack; to assault; to assault.

There shall be sedition among men, and invading one another, they shall not regard their kings.

Thou think it 'is much, that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin; so 'tis to thee:

But where the greater malady is fix'd,

The lesser is scarce felt.

3. To violate with the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend.

Your foes are such, as they, not you, have made;

And virtue may repel, though not invade.

INVADER. n. f. [invado, Latin.]

1. One who enters with hostility into the possessions of another. The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither did they, as invaders, land in Ireland.

Their petty

In sharp contest of battle found no aid

Against invaders.

That knowledge, like the coal from the altar, serves only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders.

Were he lost, the naked empire

Would be a prey expos'd to all invaders.

The country about Attica was the most barren of any in Greece, through which means it happened that the natives were never expelled by the fury of *in *ade.

Secure, by William's care, let Britain stand;

Not dread the bold invader's hand.

Alleen and judgment with strong fancy join,

To call the fair invader in;

My darling favourite inclination, too,

Ally, all conspiring with the foe.

2. An assailant.

3. Encroacher; intruder. The substance thereof was formerly comprised in that uncompounded style, but afterwards prudently enlarged for the repelling and preventing heretical invaders.

INVADENCE. n. f. [invades, Latin.] Strength; health; force.

INVALID. adj. [invalid, Fr. invalidus, Latin.] Weak; of no weight or cogency.

But this I urge,

Admitting motion in the heav'ns, to shew

Invalid, that which thee to doubt it now'd.

TO INVALIDATE. v. a. [from invalid.] To weaken; to deprive of force or efficacy.

To invalidate such a consequence, some things might be speciously enough alleged.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted, bring a score of witnesses of the falsehood of his misrest, and it is ten to one but three kind words of her's shall invalidate all their testimonies.

INVALID. n. f. [Fr.] One disabled by sickness or hurts. What beggar in the invalids,

With lameness broke, with blindness smitten,

With'd ever decently to die?

INVALIDITY. n. f. [in and validity, invalidit, French.]

1. Weakness; want of cogency. 2. Want of bodily strength. This is no English meaning. He ordered, that none who could work should be idle; and that none who could not work, by age, sickness, or invalidity, should want.

INVARIABLE. adj. [in and variable.] Precious above estimation; incalimable. The faith it produced would not be so free an act as it ought, to which are annexed all the glorious and invaluable privileges of believing.

INVARIABLE. adj. [in and variatus, Lat. invariable, Fr.] Unchangeable; constant. Being not able to design times by days, months, or years, they thought best to determine these alterations by (some known and invariable signs, and such did they conceive the rising and setting of the fixed stars.

The rule of good and evil would not then appear uniform and invariable, but would seem different, according to mens different complexions and inclinations.

INVARIABLENESS. n. f. [from invariable.] Immutability; constancy. INVARIABLELY. adv. [from invariable.] Unchangeably; constantly. He, who fleers his course invariably by this rule, takes the surest way to make all men praise him.

INVASION. n. f. [invasion, French; invasio, Latin.]

1. Hostile entrance upon the rights or possessions of another; hostile encroachment. We made an invasion upon the Cherethites.

Reason finds a secret grief and remorse from every invasion that sin makes upon innocence, and that must render the full entrance and admission of sin uneasy. South.

The nations of th' Aulonian frame
Shall hear the dreadful rout, from afar,
Of arm'd invasion, and embrace the war. Dryden.
William the Conqueror invaded England about the year 1066, which means this; that taking the duration from our Saviour's time till now, for one inure length of time, it flows at what distance this invasion was from the two extremes. Lucie.

2. Attack of an epidemical disease.

What demonstrates the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons. Arbutnot.

INVASIVE, adj. [from invade.] Entering hostilely upon other mens possessions; not defensive.

I must come closer to my purpose, and not make more invasion wars abroad, when, like Hannibal, I am called back to the defence of my country. Dryden.

Let other monarchs, with invasive bands,
Lessen their people, and extend their lands;
By galling nations hated and obey'd,
Lords of the deserts that their fowls had made. Arbutnot.

INVECTIVE, n. f. [invektio, Fr. invechtion, low Lat.] A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.

Plain men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skillful as to unwind themselves, where the snares of closing speech do lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear lo bitter invektives against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoveful for the exercise of Christian duty. Hooker.

So deperate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,
Breathe out invektives against the officers. Shakspeare.
Calling off the respect fit to be continued between kings, even when their blood is hottest, he fell to bitter invektives against the French king. Bacon.

Whist we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invektives we make at their supposed errors, fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones. Deay of Piety.

If we take satire, in the general signification of the word, for an invektive, 'tis certain that 'tis almost as old as verse. Dryden.

INVECTIVE, adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abusive.

Let him rail on; let his invektive mufe

Have four and twenty letters to abuse. Dryden.

INVECTIVELY, adv. Satirically; abusively.

'Tis most invektively he pierceth through

The body of the country, city, court,

Yea and of th' our life; fœcaring that we

Are meer usurpers, tyrants, Shakspeare.

TO INVEIGH, v. a. [inveho, Latin.] To utter censure or reproach.

I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

He inveighs severely against the folly of parties, in retaining scoundrels to retail their lies. Arbutnot.

INVEIGHER, n. f. [from inveigh.] Vehement railer.

One of these inveighers against mercury, in a course of seven weeks, could not cure one small herpes in the face. Wifemou.

TO INVEIGLE, v. a. [inveiglo, Ital. Minferu; avengler, or convincer, French, Skinner and Junius.] To persuade to something bad or hurtful; to wheedle; to allure; to seduce.

Moll false Ducissa, royal richly dight,
That easy was to inveigle weaker fight,

Was, by her wicked arts and wily skill,
Too false and strong for earthly skill or might. Spenser.

Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him. Shakspeare.

Yet have they many baits and guileful spells,
To inveigle and invite th' unwary sense

Of them that pass unweaving by the way. Milton.

'Tis right able

To inveigle and draw in the rabble. Hudibras.

Those drops of pretence, scattering sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to exalt our conceptions, not to inveigle or detain our passions. Boyle.

I leave the use of garlick to such as are inveigled into the gout by the use of too much drinking. Temple.

The inveigling a woman, before she is come to years of discretion, should be as criminal as the seducing of her before she is ten years old. Spettator.

INVEIGLER, n. f. [from inveigle.] Seducer; deceiver; allurer to ill.

Being presented to the emperor for his admirable beauty, the prince clapt him up as his inveigler. Saunders.

TO INVENT, v. a. [inventer, French; invenio, Latin.]

1. To discover; to find out; to excogitate; to produce something not made before.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, but must be received from God himself. Hume.

By their count, which lovers books invent,
The sphere of Cupid forty years contains.

Matter of mirth enough, though there were none.
She could devise, and thousand ways invent

To feed her foolish humour and vain jolliment.
Woe to them that invent to themselves instruments of wick.

We may invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our enemies.

In the motion of the bones in their articulations, a small liquor is prepared for the inunction of their heads; hence which make up the most apt mixture, for this use, that can be invented or thought upon. Luc.

Ye skillful masters of Machaon's race,
Who nature's mazy intricacies trace,

By manag'd fire, and late invented tricks,
But when long time the wretches thoughts relate,

When want hath set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ,

And that which each invented, all enjoy'd.
The ship by help of a screw, invented by Archimedes, was launched into the water. Delancey.

2. To forge; to contrive falsely; to fabricate.

I never did such things as those men have maliciously invented against me. San.

Here is a strange figure invented, against the plain face of the words. Shakspeare.

3. To feign; to make by the imagination.

I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,

As lean fac'd envy in her loathsome cave.
Hercules's meeting with pleasure and virtue, was moved by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates, and in the best days of philosophy. Delancey.

4. To light on; to meet with.

Far off he wonders what them makes so glad:
Or Bacchus' merry fruit they did invent,

Or Cybel's frantic rites have made them mad. Boyle.

INVENTER, n. f. [from inventor, French.]

1. One who produces something new; a deviser of something not known before.

As a translator, he was just; as an inventer, he was rich. Gen.

2. A forger.

INVENTION, n. f. [invention, French; inventio, Latin.]

1. Fiction.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention!

By improving what was writ before,
Invention labours less, but judgment more.

Invention is a kind of muse, which, being possid'd of to other advantages common to her sisters, and being waded by the fire of Apollo, is raised higher than the rest. Dryden.

The chief excellence of Virgil is judgment, of Homer a invention. Pope.

2. Discovery.

Nature hath provided several glands to separate this part from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are of a late invention, and called dottus falsivulvæ. Boyle.

3. Excogitation; act of producing something new.

Mine is th' invention of the charming lute;
Sweet notes and heav'nly numbers I impart. Dean.

4. Forgery.

We hear our bloody cruelties, not consulting
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers

With strange invention. Shakspeare.

If thou can'st accuse,
Do it without invention suddenly.

5. The thing invented.

The garden, a place not fairer in natural ornaments than artificial invention.

Th' invention all admir'd; and each how he
To be th' inventor mis'd; so easily it seem'd

Once found, which yet unsound mind would have thought Impossible. Milton.

INVENTIVE, adj. [inventiv, Fr. from invent.] Quick at contrivance; ready at expedients; having the power of invention.

Those have the inventive heads for all purposes, and never rest tongues in all matters. Dean.

As he had an inventive brain, so there never lived an inventive man that believed better thereof, and of himself. Rowe.

Reason, remembrance, wit, inventive art,
No nature, but immortal, can impart.

That inventive head,
Her fatal image from the temple drew,

The sleeping guardians of the castle drew.
The inventive god, who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart. Dean.

INVENTOR. n. f. [inventor, Latin.]

1. A finder out of something new.

We have the statue of your Columbus, that discovered the West Indies, also the inventor of ships; your monk, that was the inventor of ordnance, and of gunpowder. Bacon.

Studious they appear

Of arts that pollish life; inventors rare,
Unmindful of their maker. Milton.

Th' invention all admir'd, and each how he

To be the inventor mis'd. Milton.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author and inventor, and the reader led to a belief that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue? Atterb.

2. A contriver; a framer. In an ill sense.

In this upshot, purposes mistook,

Shakspeare.

INVENTORIAL. adv. [from inventor, whence perhaps inventorial] In manner of an inventory.

INVENTRESS. n. f. [inventrice, Fr. from inventor.] A female that invents.

The arts with all their retinue of lesser trades, history and tradition tell us when they had their beginning; and how many of their inventors and inventresses were deified. Burnet.

Cecilia came,

Inventress of the vocal frame:

The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred floor,

Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds. Dryden.

INVERSE. adj. [inverse, Fr. inverse, Latin.] Inverted; reciprocal: opposed to direct. It is so called in proportion, when the fourth term is so much greater than the third, as the second is less than the first; or so much less than the third as the second is greater than the first.

Every part of matter tends to every part of matter with a force, which is always in a direct proportion of the quantity of matter, and an inverse duplicate proportion of the distance. Garbh.

INVERSION. n. f. [inversio, Fr. inversio, Latin.]

1. Change of order or time, so as that the last is first, and first last. If he speaks truth, it is upon design, and a subtle inversion of the precept of God, to do good that evil may come of it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

'Tis just the inversion of an act of parliament; your lordship first signed it, and then it was pass'd amongst the lords and commons. Dryden.

2. Change of place, so as that each takes the room of the other.

To INVERT. v. a. [invert, Latin.]

1. To turn upside down; to place in contrary method or order to that which was before.

With fate inverted, shall I humbly woo?

And some proud prince, in wild Numidia born,

Pray to accept me, and forget my scorn? Waller.

Ask not the cause why fullen spring

So long delays her flow's to bear,

And winter storms invert the year. Dryden.

Poetry and oratory omit things essential, and invert times and actions, to place every thing in the most affecting light. Watts.

2. To place the last first.

Yes, every poet is a fool;

By demonstration Ned can show it:

Happy, could Ned's inverse rule

Prove every fool to be a poet. Prior.

3. To divert; to turn into another channel; to embuzzle. Instead of this convert or invert is now commonly used.

Solyman charged him bitterly with inverting his treasures to his own private use, and having secret intelligence with his enemies. Knellet's Hist. of the Turks.

INVERTEDLY. adv. [from inverted.] In contrary or reversed order.

Placing the forepart of the eye to the hole of the window of a darkened room, we have a pretty landkip of the objects abroad, invertedly painted on the paper, on the back of the eye. Derham's Physico-Theology.

To INVEST. v. a. [investir, Fr. investis, Latin.]

1. To dress; to clothe; to array. When it has two accusatives it has in or sub before the thing.

Their gesture sad,

Invest in lank lean cheeks and war-worn coats,

Presented them unto the gazing moon,

So many horrid ghosts. Shakspeare.

Thou with a mantle didst invest

The rising world of waters. Milton.

Let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre;

Invest them with thy loveliest smiles, put on

Thy choicest looks. Denham.

2. To place in possession of a rank or office.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, that which we do is only to testify that we make places of publick resort, that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Haller.

After the death of the other archbishop he was invested in that high dignity, and settled in his palace at Lambeth. Clar.

The practice of all ages, and all countries, hath been to do honour to those who are invested with publick authority. Atter.

Honour must,

Not accompanied, invest him only;

But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine

On all defervors. Shakspeare.

The foolish, over-careful fathers for this engross'd

The canker'd heaps of strong achieved gold;

For this they have been thoughtful to invest

Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shakspeare.

Some great potentate,

Or of the thrones above; such majesty

Invests him coming. Milton.

4. To confer; to give.

If there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it invests a right of government. Bacon.

5. To inclose; to surround so as to intercept succours or provisions: as, the enemy invested the town.

INVESTMENT. adj. [investiti, Latin.] Covering; clothing.

The shells served as plafons or moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated and freed from its investing shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.

INVESTIGABLE. adj. [from investigate.] To be searched out; discoverable by rational disquisition.

Finally, in such sort they are investigable, that the knowledge of them is general; the world hath always been acquainted with them. Haller.

In doing evil, we prefer a less good before a greater, the greatness whereof is by reason investigable, and may be known. Haller.

To INVESTIGATE. v. a. [investigare, Latin.] To search out; to find out by rational disquisition.

Investigate the variety of motions and figures made by the organs for articulation. Haller.

From the present appearances investigate the powers and forces of nature, and from these account for future observations. Clype's Phil. Princ.

INVESTIGATION. n. f. [investigation, Fr. investigatio, Latin.]

1. The act of the mind by which unknown truths are discovered.

Not only the investigation of truth, but the communication of it also, is often practised in such a method as neither agrees precisely to synthetick or analytic. Watts.

Progressive truth, the patient force of thought

Investigation calm, whole silent powers

Command the world. Thomson.

2. Examination.

Your travels I hear much of: my own shall never more be in a strange land, but a diligent investigation of my own territories: I mean no more translations, but something domestic, fit for my own country. Pope to Swift.

INVESTITURE. n. f. [French.]

1. The right of giving possession of any manor, office, or benefice.

He had refused to yield up to the pope the investiture of bishops, and collation of ecclesiastical dignities within his dominions. Kale's Essay.

2. The act of giving possession.

INVESTMENT. n. f. [an and vestim.] Dress; clothes; garment; habit.

Ophelia, do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,

Not of that die which their investment wears. Shakspeare.

You, my lord archbishop,

Whole see is by a civil peace maintained,
Whole heard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whole learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whole white investments figure innocence,
The dove, and every blest spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself,
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the basin and bull's tongue of war? Shakspeare

INVERTERACY. n. f. [inverteratus, Latin.]

1. Long continuance of any thing bad; obliquity confirmed by time.

The inverteracy of the people's prejudices compelled their rulers to make use of all means for reducing them. Addison

2. [In playfick.] Long continuance of a dislike.

INVERTERATE. adj. [inverteatus, Latin.]

1. Old; long established.

The custom of christians was then, and had been a long time, not to wear gauds, and therefore that undoubtedly they did offend who presumed to violate such a custom by not observing that thing; the very inverterate observation whereof was a law, sufficient to bind all men to observe it, unless they could show some higher law, some law of scripture, or the contrary. Hobbes

It is an inverterate and received opinion, that cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder and exacerbate it. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Obsolete by long continuance.

It is not every fatal violation of conscience that can quench the spirit; but it must be a long inverterate course, and custom of sinning, that at length produces and ends in such a cursed effect. South's Sermons

He who writes false honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient when he prescribes hath remedies to an inverterate disease. Dryden

In a well-instituted state the executive power will never let slaves grow inverterate, or multiply so far that it will be hard to find remedies. Swift

INVERTERATELY. adv. [inverteatus, Fr. inverte, Latin.] To harden or make obdurate by long continuance.

The vulgar conceived, that now there was an end given, and a consummation to superstitious prophecies, and to an ancient tacit expectation, which had by tradition been infused and inverted into many minds. Bacon

Let not atheism lay the fault of their sins upon human nature, which have their prevalence from long custom and inverted habit. Bentley's Sermons

INVERTERATENESS. n. f. [from inverterate.] Long continuance of any thing bad; obliquity confirmed by time.

As time hath rendered him more perfect in the art, so hath the inverterateness of his malice made him more ready in the execution. Brown's Vulgar Errors

Neither the inverterateness of the mischief, nor the prevalence of the fashion, shall be any excuse for those who will not take care about the meaning of their words. Locke

INVERTERATION. n. f. [inverteratus, Latin.] The act of hardening or confirming by long continuance.

INVIDIOUS. adj. [invidiosus, Latin.]

1. Envious; malignant.

I shall open to them the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserve. Levin

2. Likely to incur or to bring hatred. This is the more usual sense.

Agamemnon found it an invidious affair to give the preference to any one of the Grecian heroes. Brown

Not to be further tedious, or rather invidious, there are a few causes which have contributed to the ruin of our morals. Swift

INVIDIOUSLY. adv. [from invidious.]

1. Malignantly; enviously.

The clergy murmur against the privileges of the laity; the laity invidiously aggravate the immunities of the clergy. Spratt

2. In a manner likely to provoke hatred.

INVIDIOUSNESS. n. f. [from invidious.] Quality of provoking envy or hatred.

TO INVIGORATE. v. a. [in and vigor.] To endure with vigour; to strengthen; to animate; to enforce.

The spleen is introduced to invigorate the slender side, which, dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate. Brown

I have lived in a reign when the prince, instead of invigorating the laws, or giving them their proper course, assumed a power of dispensing with them. Addison

No one can enjoy health without he feel a lightness and invigorating principle, which spurs him to action. Spect.

Christian graces and virtues they cannot be, unless fed, invigorated, and animated by a principle of universal charity. Atterbury's Sermons

Gentle warmth
Disposes well the earth's all teeming womb,
Invigorating tender seeds. Philips

INVIGORATION. n. f. [from invigorate.]

1. The act of invigorating.

2. The state of being invigorated.

I find in myself an appetitive faculty, which is always in actual exercise, in the very height of activity and invigoration. New

INVINCIBLE. adj. [invincibile, French; invincibilis, Latin.]

Insuperable; unconquerable; not to be subdued.

I would have thought her spirits had been invincible against all assaults of affection. Shakspeare

Should he invade any part of their country, he would see that invincible nation with their united forces up to arms. Kneller's History of the Turks

The spirit remains invincible. Mon

That mistake, which is the consequence of invincible error, scarce deserves the name of wrong judgment. Locke

If an atheist had had the making of himself, he would have framed a constitution that could have kept pace with its insatiable lust, been invincible by intemperance, and have lasted a thousand years in a perpetual debauch. Shakspeare

INVINCIBLENESS. n. f. [from invincible.] Unconquerableness, insuperableness. Shakspeare

INVINCIBLY. adv. [from invincible.] Insuperably; unconquerably.

Ye have been fearless in his righteous cause;
And as you have reced'd, to have ye do so. Mon

Invincibly

Neither invitations nor threats avail with those who are invincibly impeded, to apply them to their benefit. De. of Phil.

INVOLUBLE. adj. [invincible, French; invicibilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be profaned; not to be injured.

Thou, be sure, shalt give account
To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep
This place invulnerable, and thence from harm. Mon

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade the invulnerable main;
Th' eternal fountains overlap,
And pats at will the bounties deep. Dryden

Ye lamps of heav'n I he said, and lifted high
His hands, now free; thou venerable sky!
Invulnerable pow'rs! adord with dread,
Be all of you adjurd. Dryden

This butting, when our author pleases, must and need not be sacred and invulnerable. Locke

2. Not to be broken.

'He prophet David thinks, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love invulnerable, and set them in a league of invulnerable amity. Locke

See, see, they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd some league invulnerable. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

3. Insusceptible of hurt or wound.

'He invulnerable founts

In cubick palaces firm advanc'd intire. Mon

INVOLUBLY. adv. [from invulnerable.] Without break, without failure.

The true profession of Christianity involutely engages it's followers to do good to all men. Levin

Meer acquaintance you have none: you have involutely all into a nearer line; and they who have conversed with you, are for ever after involutely yours. Dryden

INVOLUTELY. adj. [involutely, Fr. involutus, Lat.] Virtually injured; unprotected; unprotected; unbroken.

His fortune of arms was still involutely. Locke

But let involutely truth be always dear
To thee; even before friendship, truth prefer. Dryden

If the path

Can hope a pardon, by those mutual bonds
Nature has seal'd between us, which though I Have cancell'd, thou hast still preserv'd involutely separate. Dryden

I beg thy pardon.

My love your claim involutely features;
'Tis writ in fate, I can be only yours. Dryden

In all the changes of his doubtful state,
His truth like heav'n's, was kept involutely. Dryden

INVOLUTELY. adj. [involutely, Latin.] Impassible; unviolated.

If nothing can oppose his love,
And virtue involutely ways can prove,
What may not he confide to do.
That brings both love and virtue too. Shakspeare

INVOLUTELY. n. f. [involutely, Fr. from involute.] The state of being inviolable; impenetrableness to sight.

They may be demonstrated to be impenetrable, involutely, their finalness for the reason of their involutely. Locke

INVISIBLY. adj. [invisibile, Fr. invisibilis, Latin.] Not perceptible by the sight; not to be seen.

He was invisibly that hurt me so
And none invisibly, but spirits, can go. Shakspeare

The threaten fall,
Borne with th' invisible and creeping wind,
Drew the huge bottoms to the furrow'd sea. Shakspeare

'Tis wonderful,
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To loyalty unlearn'd, honour untaught,
Civility not seen from others.
To us invisible, or dimly seen,
In these thy lowliest works.
He that believes a God, believes such a being as hath all perfections; among which this is one, that he is a spirit, and consequently that he is invisible, and cannot be seen. Tillotson.
It seems easier to make one's self invisible to others, than to make another's thoughts visible to me, which are not visible to himself. Locke.
INVISIBLE. adv. [from invisible.] Imperceptibly to the light.

Age by degrees invisibly doth creep,
Nor do we seem to die, but fall asleep. Denham.
TO INVISCATE. v. a. [in and viscus, Latin.] To lime; to intangle in glutinous matter.

The camelion's food being flies, it hath in the tongue a mucous and slimy extremity, whereby, upon a sudden emission, it inviscates and intangleth those insects. Brown.
INVITATION. n. f. [invitation, Fr. invitatio, Lat.] The act of inviting, bidding, or calling to any thing with ceremony and civility.

That other answer'd with a lowly look,
And soon the gracious invitation took. Dryden.
INVITATORY. adj. [from invito, Latin.] Using invitation;
containing invitation.

TO INVITE. v. a. [invito, Latin; inviter, French.]
1. To bid; to ask to any place, particularly to one's own house, with intreaty and complaisance.
If thou be invited of a mighty man, withdraw thyself.

He comes invited by a younger son. Ecclus. i. 39.
When much company is invited, then be as sparing as possible of your coats. Swift.

2. To allure; to persuade.
A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon.

Nor art thou such
Created, or such place hath here to dwell,
As may not oft invite, though spirits of heav'n,
To visit thee. Milton.

The liberal contributions such teachers met with, served still to invite more labourers into that work. Decay of Piety.
Shady groves, that easy sleep invite,
And after toilsome days a soft repose at night. Dryden.

TO INVITE. v. n. [invito, Latin.] To ask or call to any thing pleasing.

All things invite
To peaceful councils. Milton.

INVITER. n. f. [from invito.] He who invites.
They forcibly cut out abortive votes, such as their inviters and encouragers most fancied. King Charles.
Honour was the aim of the guests, and interest was the scope of the inviter. Smalbridge.

Wines and cates the table grace,
But most the kind inviter's cheerful face. Pope.
INVITINGLY. adv. [from inviting.] In such a manner as invites and allures.

If he can but dress up a temptation to look invitingly, the business is done. Decay of Piety.

with shades. Dick.

INUUNCTION. n. f. [inuungo, inuunctus, Latin.] The act of smearing or anointing.

The wife Author of nature hath placed on the rump two glandules, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily liniment, fit for the inuunction of the feathers, and causing their filaments to cohere. Roy.

INUNDATION. n. f. [inundatio, French; inundatio, Latin.]
1. The overflow of waters; flood; deluge. Inundation, says
Cruce, implies less than deluge.

Her father counts it dangerous,
That she should give her sorrow too much way;
And in his wisdom haltes our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakespeare.

The same inundation was not past forty foot in most places;
so that although it destroyed man and beast generally, yet some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.

All fountains of the deep,
Broke up, shall heave the ocean to surp
Beyond all bounds, 'till inundation rise
Above the highest hills. Milton.

This inundation unto the Egyptians happeneth when it is winter unto the Ethiopians. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Your care about your banks infers a fear
Of threatening floods, and inundations near. Dryden.

The hero next assail'd proud Dowry's head,
And spite of confluent inundations spread
With unexampled valour did succeed. Blackmore.

N. LXXVIII.

No swelling inundation hides the grounds,
But crystal currents glide within their bounds. Gay.
2. A confluence of any kind.

Many good towns, through that inundation of the Irish, were utterly wasted. Spenser.

TO INVOCATE. v. a. [invoco, Latin.] To invoke; to implore; to call upon; to pray to.
Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Be't lawful, that I invoke thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne. Shakespeare.

If Dagon be thy god,
Go to his temple, invoke his aid
With solemnest devotion. Milton.

Here rather let me dudge, and earn my bread,
'Till vermin or the draft of fervile food
Consume me, and oft invocate death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains. Milton.

INVOCATION. n. f. [invocation, French; invocatio, Latin.]
1. The act of calling upon in prayer.

Is not the name of prayer usual to signify even all the service that ever we do unto God? And that for no other cause, as I suppose, but to shew that there is in religion no acceptable duty which devout invocation of the name of God doth not either presuppose or infer. Hosier.

2. The form of calling for the assistance or presence of any being.

My invocation is
Honest and fair, and in his mistress's name. Shakespeare.
The proposition of Gratius is contained in a line, and that of invocation in half a line. Wolfe.

I will strain myself to breath out this one invocation. Hewel.
The whole poem is a prayer to fortune, and the invocation is divided between the two deities. Addison.

INVOICE. n. f. [This word is perhaps corrupted from the French word envoyer, send.] A catalogue of the freight of a ship, or of the articles and price of goods sent by a factor.

TO INVOLVE. v. a. [invoco, Latin; involue, French.] To call upon; to implore; to pray to.

The power I will involve dwells in her eyes.
One peculiar nation to select
From all the rest, of whom to be involved. Milton.

The skilful bard,
Striking the Thracian harp, invokes Apollo,
To make his hero and himself immortal. Prior.

TO INVOLVE. v. a. [involve, Latin.]

1. To intrap; to cover with any thing circumfluent;
Leave a finged bottom all involved
With fench and smoke. Milton.

No man could mis his way to heaven for want of light; and yet so vain are they as to think they oblige the world by involving it in darkness. Decay of Piety.

In a cloud involved, he takes his flight,
Where Greeks and Trojans mix'd in mortal fight. Dryden.

2. To imply; to comprise.
We cannot demonstrate these things so as to shew that the contrary necessarily involves a contradiction. Tillotson.

3. To entwine; to join.
He knows his end with mine involved. Milton.

4. To take in; to catch.
The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng. Pope.

Sin we should hate altogether; but our hatred of it may involve the person which we should not hate at all. Sprat.

One death involves
Tyrants and slaves. Thomson.

5. To entangle.
This reference of the name to a thing whereof we have no idea, is so far from helping at all, that it only serves the more to involve us in difficulties. Locke.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle mens reason. Locke.

6. To complicate; to make intricate.
Some involve their fraky folds. Milton.

Sylligium is of necessary use, even to the lovers of truth, to shew them the fallacies that are often concealed in florid, witty, or involved discourses. Locke.

7. To blend; to mingle together confusedly.
Earth with hell mingle and involve. Milton.

INVOLUNTARILY. adv. [from involuntary.] Not by choice;
not spontaneously.

INVOLUNTARY. adj. [in and voluntarius, Latin; involuntarius, Latin, French.]

1. Not having the power of choice.
The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng,
Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her power's confels. Dunciad.

2. Not chosen; not done willingly.
The forbearance of that action, consequent to such command of the mind, is called voluntary; and whatsoever action is performed without such a thought of the mind, is called involuntary. Locke.

But why? ah tell me, ah too dear!

Steals down my cheek the involuntary tear.

INVOLUTION. n. f. [involutus, Latin.]

1. The act of involving or wrapping.

INVULNERABLE. adj. [invulnerable, Fr. invulnerabilis, Lat.] Not to be wounded; secure from wound.

Our cannon's malice vainly shall be spent

Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n.

Shakespeare.

Not vainly hope

To be invulnerable in those bright arms,

That mortal dint none can resist,

Milton.

Vanilla, though by Pallas taught,

By love invulnerable thought,

Searching in books for wisdom's aid,

Was in the very search betray'd.

Swift.

TO INVOLVE. v. a. [in and volv.] To inclose with a wall.

Three such towns in those places with the garrisons, would be so augmented as they would be able with little to involve themselves strongly.

Spenser.

INWARD. adj. [inward, Saxon.]

INWARD. adj. [inward, Saxon.]

1. Towards the internal parts; within.

The parts of living creatures that be more inwards nourish more than the outward flesh.

Bacon.

The medicines which go to these magical ointments are so strong, that if they were used inwards they would kill; and therefore they work potentially, though outwards.

Bacon.

Celestial light shines inward.

Says Frog to Bull, this old rogue will take the management of the young lord's business into his hands: in that case what must become of us and our families? We must starve or turn journeymen to old Lewis Baboon.
JOURNWORK. n. f. [journee, French, and work.] Work performed for hire.

See how your soldier wears his cage
Of iron, like the captive Turk,
And as the gerdoun of his rage!
See how your glimmering peers do lurk,
Or at the best work journeymen.
Did no committee sit, where he Might cut out journeymen for thee?
And set thee a task with subornation,
To flitch up sale and sequestration.
Her family she was forced to hire out at journeymen to her neighbours.

JOUST. n. f. [joust, French.] Tilt; tournament; mock fight.
It is now written less properly joust.
Bases, and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights
At joust and tournament.

JOUST. v. n. [jouster, French.] To run in the tilt.
All who since
Fought in Alpramont or Montaban.

JOULET. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from boteler, as making a hideous noise after the game, whom the rest of the pack follow as their leader.] A kind of hunting dog or beagle.
See him drag his feeble legs about,
Like hounds ill-coupled jowler lugs him still
Through hedges, ditches, and through all this ill.

JOULIER. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from jolier.]
Plenty of fish is vented to the fish-drivers, whom we call jouters.
Plenty of fish is vented to the fish-drivers, whom we call
jouters.

JOY. n. f. [joye, French; gioia, Italian.]
1. The passion produced by any happy accident; gladness; exultation.

Joy is a delight of the mind, from the consideration of the present, or assured approaching possession of a good.
There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not then itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness.

There should not be such heaviness in their distraction, as shall be joy over them that are persuaded to salvation.
The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul.

2. Gaity; merriment; festivity.
The roots with joy relound:
And Hymen, in Hymen, rung around.

3. Happiness; felicity.
My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady,
I with you all the joy that you can with.
Come, love and health to all;
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine;
I drink to the general joy of the whole table.

Almeida, smiling came,
Attended with a train of all her race,
Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd;
But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy
Of my new conquest.

The bride,
Lovely herself, and lovely by her side,
A bevy of bright nymphs, with sober grace,
Came glittering like a star, and took her place:
Her heav'nly form beheld, all wilder her joys
And little wanted, but in vain, their wishes all employ.

4. A term of fondness.
Now our joy,
Although our last, yet not our least young love,
What say you?

To JOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To rejoice; to be glad; to exult.

Sometimes I joy, when glad occasion fits,
And mask in mirth like to a comedy;
Soon after, when my joy to sorrow fits,
I will make my woes a tragedy.

I cannot joy, until I be reliev'd
Where our right valiant father is become.
He will joy over thee with fingering.
I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of Israel.

Exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Thou, he said his spirit was refreshed by you.

They laugh, we weep; they joy while we lament.
No man imparteth his joys to his friend, but he joys the more; and no man imparteth his griefs, but he joys the less.

Well then, my soul, joy in the midst of pain;
Thy Christ, that conquer'd hell, shall free thee
With greater triumph yet return again,
And conquer his own justice with his love.

Joy thou,
In what he gives to thee this paradise,
And thy fair Eve.

Their cheerful age with honour youth attends,
Joy'd that from pleasure's slavery they are free.

To JOY. v. a.

1. To congratulate; to entertain kindly.
Like as they love or hate; like as they know
To joy the friend, or grapple with the foe.

2. To gladden; to exhilarate.
She went to Pamela, meaning to delight her eyes and her thoughts with the conversation of her beloved sister.

My soul was joy'd in vain;
For angry Neptune rous'd the raging main.

3. [Jouis de, French.] To enjoy; to have happy possession.
Let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-colour'd love.

I might have liv'd, and joy'd immortal bliss,
Yet willingly chose rather death with thee.
Th' usurper joy'd not long
His ill-got crown.

JOYANCE. n. f. [joiance, old French.] Gaity; festivity.
Bring home with you the glory of her game;
With joyance bring her, and with jollity.

There him rests in riotous substance,
Of all his gladfulness and kingly joyance.

JOYFUL. adj. [joy and full.]
1. Full of joy; glad; exulting.

They blessed the king, and went unto their tents glad of heart.

My soul shall be joyful in my God.
Sometimes it has of before the cause of joy.
Six brave companions from each ship we left:
With sails outspread we by the wind were left.

Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life.
JOYFULLY. adv. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.

If we no more meet 'till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinsmen, warriors all, adieu.
Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to fix:
With such alacrity they bore away,
As if to praise them all the states stood by.

The good Christian considers pain only as necessary passages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark scene of fancied horror, sees a crown and a throne, and joyfully blest, prepared for him, joyfully receives his summons, as if he has long impatiently expected it.

JOYFULNESS. n. f. [from joyful.] Gladness; joy.
Thou servest not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things thou enjoyest.

JOYLESS. adj. [from joy.]
1. Void of joy; feeling no pleasure.

A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am she, and altogether joyful.

With down-cast eyes the joyless victor sat,
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below;
And now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow.

2. It has sometimes of before the object.
With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast;
He looks and languishes, and leaves his rest:
Forfeats his food, and, pining for the last,
Is joyless of the grove, and spurns the growing grafts. Dryd.

3. Giving no pleasure.
A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:
Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad. Shaksp.
Here love his golden shafts employs; here lights
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd, Casual fruition. Milton.

The pure in heart hath fed God; and if any others could so invade this their inclosure, as to take heaven by violence, it surely would be a very joyless possession. Dryd. of Piety.
He forgets his sleep, and loaths his food.
That youth, and health, and war are joyless to him. Addison.

- Jo'yous. adj. [joyous, French.]*
1. Glad; gay; merry.
Mott joyous man, on whom the shining sun
Did shew his face, myself I did esteem,
And that my falser friend no less joyous deem.
'Joyous the birds; fresh gales and gentle airs Whisper'd it. Milton.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beats, by nature stung, renew their love. Dryden.
Falt by her flow'ry bank the sons of Arcas, Fav'rites of heav'n, with happy care protect Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave. Prior.

2. Giving joy.
They all as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence led her forth, about her dancing round. Spenser.

3. It has of sometimes before the cause of joy.
Round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joyous of our conquest early won;
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should grudge our happy end, and wish it theirs. Dryd.

IRACUNDIA. n. f. [An Indian plant.]
Specacunda is a small irregularly contorted root, rough, dense, and firm. One sort is of a dusky greyish colour on the surface, and of a paler grey when broken, which is brought from Peru: the other sort is a smaller root, resembling the former; but it is of a deep dusky brown, or blackish colour on the outside, and white when broken, brought from the Brazils.
The grey ought to be preferred in medicinal use, because the brown, being stronger, is apt to operate more roughly. Specacunda was in the middle of the last century first brought into Europe, and became celebrated for the cure of dysenteries, a virtue discovered in it by the Indians; but after a few years it sunk into oblivion, being given in too large doses. Hill's Mat. Med.

IRASCIBLE. adj. [irascibilis, low Latin; irascibilis, French.]
Partaking of the nature of anger.

The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, and the conspicuous distractions the crafts of the liver. Brown.
I know more than one instance of irascible passions subdued
by a vegetable diet. Arbuthnot.

We are here in the country surrounded with blessings and pleasures, without any occasion of exercising our irascible faculties. Digby to Pope.

IRE. n. f. [Fr. ira, Latin.] Anger; rage; passionate hatred.
She lik'd not his desire;

Fain would be free, but dreaded parents' ire. Sidney.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not flake mine ire, nor ease my heart. Shaksp.
Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's that so long Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's son. Milton.

The sentence, from thy head remov'd,
On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe;
Me! me! only just object of his ire. Milton.

For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
'Till the last slave be render'd to her fire. Dryden.

IRISFUL. adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.

The irisful bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I soon encounter'd. Shaksp.

By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the irisful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shaksp.

There learn'd this maid of arms the irisful guise. Fairfax.
In midst of all the dome misfortune sat,
And gloomy discontent and fell debate,
And madnes laughing in his irisful mood. Dryden.

IRISFULLY. adv. [from ire.] With ire; in an angry manner.

IRIS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. The rainbow.
Beside the solary iris, which God shew'd unto Noah, there is another lunar, whose efficient is the moon. Brown.
2. Any appearance of light resembling the rainbow.
When both bows appeared more distinct, I measured the breadth of the interior iris 2 gr. 10; and the breadth of the red, yellow, and green in the exterior iris, was to the breadth of the same colours in the interior 3 to 2. Newton.
3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.
4. The flower-de-luce.

Iris all hues, roses, and jessamine. Milton.
IRK. v. a. [irk, work, Islandick.] This word is used only imperfectly, it irks me; mihi parva est, it gives me pain; or,
I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the Accidence say, tædet, it irks.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shaksp.

It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd. Shaksp.
IRKSOME. adj. [from irk.] Wearisome; tedious; troublesome; toilsome; tiresome; unpleasing. Shaksp.

I know the irk is an irksome bawling fool. Shaksp.
Since that thou can't talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erit was irksome to me,
I will endure. Shaksp. Lear.

Where he may likeliest find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours, 'till his great chief return. Milton.
For not to irk me toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reason join'd. Milton.

There is nothing irksome as general discourses, especially when they turn chiefly upon words. Addison.

Frequent appeals from hence have been very irksome to that illustrious body. Swift.
IRKSOMELY. adv. [from irksome.] Wearisomely; tediously.
IRKSOMENESS. n. f. [from irksome.] Tedioufness; wearisomeness.

IRON. n. f. [bairn, Welsh; iroen, iren, Saxon; isern, Euse.]

1. A metal common to all parts of the world, plentiful in soils, and of a small price, though superior in real value to the dea-craft. Though the lightest of all metals, except tin, it is considerably the hardest; and, when pure, naturally malleable, but in a less degree than gold, silver, lead, or copper: when wrought into steel, or when in the impure state from its first fusion, in which it is called cast iron, it is scarce malleable; and the most ductile iron, heated and suddenly quenched in cold water, loses much of this quality. Iron is more capable of rust than any other metal, is very sonorous, and requires the strongest fire of all the metals to melt it, and is with difficulty amalgamated with mercury. Most of the other metals are brittle, while they are hot; but this is most malleable as it approaches nearest to fusion. It consists of a vitriolick salt, a vitriolick earth, and a peculiar bituminous matter. The specific gravity of iron is to water as 7532 is to 1000. It is the only known substance that is attracted by the loadstone.
Iron is not only soluble in all the stronger acids, but even in common water. Pure iron has been found in some places, but very rarely. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals. Hill.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shaksp.
If he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die,
he is a murderer. Numbers.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a load-stone, and a power to be so drawn is a part of that of iron.

In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates, placed parallel to each other. Locke.

There are incredible quantities of iron slag in various parts of the forest of Dean. Woodward.

Iron stone lies in strata.
I treated of making iron work, and steel work in general. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.

2. Any instrument or utensil made of iron: as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing iron.

Iron of a doil, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, their base slaves,
Ere yet the light be done, pack up. Shaksp.

O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries. Shaksp.

His feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in iron. Psalms.
Can't thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fish-spears? Jeb.

For this your locks in paper-durance bound?
For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around? Pope.

3. Chain; shackle; manacle: as, he was put in irons.
The iron entered into his soul. Psalms, Common Prayer.

IRON. adj.

1. Made of iron.

In iron walls they deem'd me not secure.
Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight
Unto my cell.

Shakeſp.

Some are of an iron red, shining, and polite; others not polite, but as if powdered with iron dust.

Shakeſpeare.

Poll-cats and weelds do a great deal of injury to warrent:
the way of taking them is in hutches, and iron traps.

Woodward.

2. Refembling iron in colour.

A piece of ſtone of a dark iron grey colour, but in ſome parts of a ferruginous colour.

Woodward.

Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright.

Woodward.

3. Harſh; fever; rigid; miserable; calamitous: as, the iron age, for an age of hardſhip and wickedneſs. Theſe ideas may be found more or leſs in all the following examples.

Three vigorous virgins, waiting ſtill behind,
Alſit the throne of th' iron ſcepter'd king.

Craſhaw.

O ſad virgin, that thy power
Might bid the ſoul of Orpheus ſing
Such notes as warbled to the ſtrings,
Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheeks,
And made hell grant what love did ſeek.

Milton.

In all my iron years of wars and dangers,
From blooming youth down to decaying age,
My fame ne'er knew a ſtain of diſhonour.

Rowe.

Love crush the nations with an iron rod,
And ev'ry monarch be the ſcourge of God.

Pope.

4. Indifſoluble; unbroken.

Ruth Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeaſurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his ſuff'ring by irriſcuous ſleep,
Impudent: him death's iron ſleep oppreſs.

Philips.

5. Hard; impenetrable.

I will converſe with iron witted fools,
And unrecipſive boys: none are for me,
That look into me with conſid'rate eyes.

Shakeſp.

To IRON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To ſmooth with an iron.

2. To ſhackle with irons.

IRONICAL. adj. [ironique, Fr. from irony.] Expreſſing one thing and meaning another; ſpeaking by contraries.

In this fallacy may be compriſed all ironical miſtakes, or expreſſions receiving inverted ſignifications.

Brown.

I take all your ironical civilities in a literal ſenſe, and ſhall expect them to be literally performed.

Swift.

IRONICALLY. adv. [from ironical.] By the uſe of irony.

Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wiſeſt man of Greece, which he would turn from himſelf ironically, ſaying, there could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wiſe, and knew it; and others were not wiſe, and knew it not.

Bacon.

The dean ironically grave,

Still flum'd the fool, and laſh'd the knave.

Swift.

IRONMONGER. n. f. [iron and mangel.] A dealer in iron.IRONWOOD. n. f. A kind of wood extremely hard, and ſopomprous as to ſink in water. It grows in America. *Rob. Gray.*IRONWORT. n. f. [jilicites, Latin.] It is a plant with a labiated flower, conſiſting of one leaf, whole upper lip or beard is divided into three parts: out of the flower-cup riſes the pointal, attended, as it were, by four embryos; which afterward turn to ſo many oblong ſeeds, ſhut up in an huſk, which before was the flower-cup: to theſe marks muſt be added, the flowers growing in whorles at the wings of the leaves, which are cut like a cleft, and differ from the other leaves of the plant. Mill.

IRONY. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron; partaking of iron.

The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary: it is not ſtrange if the iron chains have more ſolidity than the contemplative.

Hemond.

Some ſprings of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick ſalts, diſſolve the body of one metal, ſuppoſe iron, put into the ſpring; and depoſite, in lieu of the iron particles carried off, copper particles.

Woodward.

IRONY. n. f. [ironie, Fr. ironie.] A mode of ſpeech in which the meaning is contrary to the words: as, Bling, bling was a holy man.

So gave a body, upon ſo ſolemn an occaſion, ſhould not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries.

Swift.

IRRADIANCE. n. f. [irradiance, French; irradiation, Latin.]IRRADIANCY. n. f. [irradiance, French; irradiation, Latin.]

1. Emiſſion of rays or beams of light upon any object.

The principal affection is its tranſluſcency, the irradiancy and ſparkling, found in many gems, is not diſcoverable in this.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Beams of light emitted.

Love not the heav'nly ſpirits? Or do they mix
Ira iane? virtual, or immediate touch?

Milton.

To IRRADIATE. v. a. [irradiare, Latin.]

1. To adorn with light emitted upon it; to brighten.

When he thus perceives that theſe opacous bodies do not blind the eye from judging light to have an equal plenary diffuſion through the whole place it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, to be every where mingled with light.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; ſuch an one irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it deſcends.

2. To enlighten intellectually; to illumine; to illuminate.

Celeſtial light

Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers
Irradiate; there plant eyes: all muſt from thence Purge and diſperſe.

3. To animate by heat or light.

Ethereal or ſolar heat muſt diſſe, influence, irradiate, and put thoſe more ſimple parts of matter into motion.

4. To decorate with ſhining ornaments.

No weeping orphan ſaw his father's ſtore

Our ſhines irradiate, or imblaze the floor.

IRRADIATION. n. f. [irradiation, Fr. from irradiate.]

1. The act of emitting beams of light.

If light were a body it ſhould diſſe away the air, which is likewiſe a body, wherever it is admitted; for within the ſphere of the irradiation of it, there is no point but light is found.

The generation of bodies is not effected by irradiation, or anſwerably unto the propagation of light; but herein a radimiſſion is made materially from ſome parts, and ideally from every one.

IRRADIATION. n. f. [irradiation, Fr. from irradiate.]

2. Illumination; intellectual light.

The means of derivation and immediate union of the intelligible objects to the underſtanding, are ſometimes divine and ſupernatural, as by immediate irradiation or revelation.

IRRADIATION. n. f. [irradiation, Fr. from irradiate.]

1. Void of reaſon; void of underſtanding; without the diſcourſive faculty.

Thus began

Outrage from liſtels thoughts; but diſcord firſt,
Daughter of ſin, among th' irrational
Death introduc'd.

He hath ear'n, and lives,
And knows, and ſpeaks, and reaſons and diſcours;
Irrational 'till then.

2. Abſurd; contrary to reaſon.

Since the brain is only a part tranſmiſſent, and the homours oft are precipitated to the lungs before they arrive at the brain, no kind of benefit can be effected from rational an application.

I ſhall quietly ſubmit, not wiſhing ſo irrational a thing as that every body ſhould be deceived.

IRRATIONALITY. n. f. [from irrational.] Want of reaſon.

IRRATIONALLY. adv. [from irrational.] Without reaſon; abſurdly.

IRRECLIMABLE. adj. [from irclimable.] Not to be claimed; not to be changed to the better.

As for obſtinate, irclimable, proſtituted enemies, we ſhall expect their calumnies will continue.

IRRECONCILABLE. adj. [irreconcilable, Fr. from irconcilable.]

1. Not to be reconciled; not to be appeaſed.

Wage eternal war,

Irreconcilable to our grand foe.

A weak unequal faction may animate a government, but when it grows equal in ſtrength, and irreconcilable by neceſ-ſity, it cannot end without ſome cruſh.

There are no factions, though irreconcilable to one another,
that are not united in their affection to you.

Not to be made conſiſtent. It has uſe of it.

As ſhe was ſtrictly virtuous herſelf, ſo ſhe always perfect conſtruction upon the words and actions of her ſer-vants, except where they were irreconcilable to the rules of honesty and decency.

Since the ſenſe I oppoſe is attended with ſuch great irreconcilable abſurdities, I preſume I need not offer any thing further in ſupport of the one, or in diſproof of the other.

His eſſential power of gravitation or attraction is irreconcilable to the atheiſt's own doctrine of a chaos.

All that can be tranſmitted from the ſun is wholly uncountable, and irreconcilable to any ſyſtem of ſcience.

IRRECONCILABLENESS. n. f. [from irreconcilable.] Inap-pability to be reconciled.

IRRECONCILABLY. adv. [from irreconcilable.] In a manner not admitting reconciliation.

IRRECONCILED. adj. [non reconcilié.] Not reconciled.

A ſervant dies in many irreconcilable iniquities.

IRRECOVERABLE. adj. [non recoverabilis.]

1. Not to be regained; not to be reſtored or repaired.

Time, in a natural ſenſe, is irrecoverable: the moment
juſt fled by us, it is impoſſible to recall.

Not to be remedied.

The irrecoverable loſs of ſo many livings of principal value.

It concerns every man, that would not write away in fool, and fool himſelf into irrecoverable miſery, with an greateſt ſeriousneſs to enquire.

IRRECOVERABLENESS. n. f. [from irrecoverable.] Inap-pability to be recovered.

IRRECOVERABLY. adv. [from irrecoverable.] In a manner not admitting recovery.

Him, after long debate, irresolute
Of thoughts revolv'd, his final sentence chose Fit vessel, fittest imp of fraud, in whom

To enter. Milton.
To make reflections upon what is past, is the part of ingenious but irresolute men. Temple.

So Myrrah's mind, impell'd on either side,
Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide;
Irresolute on which she should rely,
At last unfix'd in all, is only fix'd to die. Dryden.

IRRESOLUTELY. adv. [from irresolute.] Without firmness of mind; without determined purpose.

IRRESOLUTION. n. f. [from irresolutio, Fr. in and resolution.] Want of firmness of mind.

It hath most force upon things that have the lightest motion, and therefore upon the spirits of men, and in them upon such affections as move lightest; as upon men in fear, or men in irresolution. Bacon.

Irresolution on the schemes of life, which offer themselves to our choice, and inconstancy in pursuing them, are the greatest causes of all our unhappiness. Addison.

IRRESPECTIVE. adj. [in and respective.] Having no regard to any circumstances.

Thus did the Jew, by persuading himself of his particular irrespective election, think it safe to run into all sins. Hammond on Fundamentals.

According to this doctrine, it must be resolved wholly into the absolute irrespective will of God. Rogers.

IRRESPECTIVELY. adv. [from irrespective.] Without regard to circumstances.

IRREVERENCE. n. f. [irreverentia, Lat. irreverence, Fr. in and reverence.]

1. Want of reverence; want of veneration; want of respect. Having seen our scandalous irreverence towards God's worship in general, 'tis easy to make application to the several parts of it. Dryden of Pity.

They were a sort of attributes, with which it was a matter of religion to salute them on all occasions, and which it was an irreverence to omit. Pope.

2. State of being disregarded.

The concurrence of the house of peers in that fury, can be imputed to no one thing more than to the irreverence and scorn the judges were justly in, who had been always looked upon there as the oracles of the law. Clarendon.

IRREVERENT. adj. [irreverent, Fr. in and reverent.] Not paying due homage or reverence; not expressing or conceiving due veneration or respect.

As our fear excludeth not that boldness which becometh saints, so, if our familiarity with God do not favour of fear, it draweth too near that irreverent confidence whereunto humility can never stand.

Knowledge men sought for, and covered it from the strict scrutiny of the ignorant and irreligious. Watts.

Witness the irreverent son

Of him who built the ark; who, for the shame

Done to his father, heard his heavy curse,

Servant of servants, on his vicious race,

Swearing, and the irreverent using the name of God in common discourse, is another abuse of the tongue.

If an irreverent expression or thought too warm an ear into my verses, through my inactivity, let that answer be answerable for them. Watts.

IRREVERENTLY. adv. [from irreverent.] Without due respect or veneration.

'Tis but an ill essay of reverence and godly fear to do the gospel irreverently. Government of the Tongue.

The sins of his chamber and his closet shall be proclaimed before men and angels, and an eternal irreversible sentence pronounced. Ex.

IRREVERSIBLY. adv. [from irreversible.] Without change.

The title of fundamentals, being ordinarily confined to the doctrines of faith, hath occasioned that great title in this church, at which so many myriads of solidarians have bled, and fallen irreversibly, by conceiving heaven a mass of true opinions. Hewel.

IRREVOCABLE. adj. [irrevocabilis, Latin; irrevocable, Fr.] Not to be recalled; not to be brought back; not to be reversed.

Give thy hand to Warwick,

And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocably,

That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine. Shakespeare.

Firm and irrevocably is my doom,

Which I have paid upon her.

Thar which is past is gone and irrevocably, dissipated

do but trifle that labour in past matters. Shakespeare.

The second, both for pity renewed,

And puerile deeds, a promise shall receive

Irrevocable, that his regal throne

For ever shall endure. Milton.

By her irrevocable fate,

War shall the country waste and change the face. Dryden.

The other victor flame a moment flood,

Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood;

For ever lost, th' irrevocable light

Forsook the black'ning coals, and sunk to night. Dryden.

Each sacred accent bears eternal weight,

And each irrevocable word is fate. Pope.

IRREVOCABLY. adv. [from irrevocable.] Without recall.

If air were kept out four or five minutes, the irrevocably irrevocably extinguished. Watts.

IRRIGATE. v. a. [irrigo, Latin.] To wet; to water, to water.

The heat, which is one of the principal parts of the body, doth continually irrigate, nourish, keep hot, and liquefy the members. Watts.

A bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,

Their frying blood compels to irrigate

Their dry lur'd tongues. A. Pope.

IRRIGATION. n. f. [from irrigate.] The act of watering or moistening.

Help of ground is by watering and irrigation. Watts.

IRRIGUOUS. adj. [from irrigate.]

1. Watery; watered.

The flow'ry lap

Of some irriguous valley spreads her floor. Milton.

2. Dewy; moist. Philips seems to have mistaken the Latin phrase irriguus for ser.

With Elenor

Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought

'T' exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep. Pope.

Insipid! him death's iron sleep oppress.

IRRIGATION. n. f. [irrigatio, Latin; irrigation, French.] The act of laughing at another.

This person, by his indelicate and unamiable irrigation and expunging of his father, incurs his indignation and exile. Watts and Newton's History.

TA IRRITATE. v. a. [irrito, Latin; irriter, French.]

1. To provoke; to tease; to exasperate.

The earth, speaking to the freeholders in impetuous language, did not irritate the people. Watts.

His power at court could not qualify him to go through out that difficult reformation, whilst he had a superior in the church, who, having the reins in his hand, could direct them according to his own humour and indirection, and was thought to be the more ready to irritate his cholerous fiction. Clarendon.

2. To fret; to put into motion or disorder by any irregular or unaccustomed contact; to stimulate; to vellicate.
Cold maketh the spirits vigorous, and irritateth them. Bacon.

3. To heighten; to agitate; to enrage.
Air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely, as fire scorseth in frosty weather. Bacon.
When they are collected, the heat becometh more violent and irritate, and thereby expelleth sweat. Bacon.
Rous'd

By dash of clouds, or irritating war
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring. Tomson.

IRRUPTION. n. f. [irruptio, Fr. irruption, Latin.]

1. The act of anything forcing an entrance.

I refrain, too suddenly,

To utter what will come at last too soon;
Left evil tidings, with too rude irruption,
Hitting thy aged ear, should pierce too deep. Milton.

There are frequent inundations made in maritime countries by the irruption of the sea. Burnet.

A full and sudden irruption of thick melancholic blood into the heart puts a stop to its pulsation. Harvey.

2. Inroad; burst of invaders into any place.

Notwithstanding the irruptions of the barbarous nations, one can scarce imagine how so plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled. Aldison.

IS. [yr, Saxon. See TA BE.]

1. The third person singular of to be: I am, thou art, he is.
He that is God, heareth God's words. Jo. viii. 47.
Be not afraid of them, for they cannot do evil; neither is it in them to do good. Jeremiah.

My thought, whose murder yet it but fantastical,
Shakes to my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in fumes; and nothing is,
But what it is not. Shakespeare.

2. It is sometimes expressed by 'i'.

There's some among you have beheld me fighting. Shakespeare.

ISABELLA. Colour. n. f. A kind of colour. Anyasseth.

ISCHIA'DICK. adj. [ischyus, ischyadick; ischiadique, Fr.] In anatomy, an epithet given to the veins of the foot that terminate in the crural. Harris.

ISCHURE'TICK. n. f. [ischure'tique, Fr. from ischury.] Such medicines as force urine when suppressed.

ISM. [yr, Saxon.]

1. A termination added to an adjective to express diminution, a small degree, or incipient state of any quality: as, bluish, tending to blue; brightish, somewhat bright.

2. It is likewise sometimes the termination of a gentile or possessive adjective: as, Danish, Danish; the Danish territories, or territories of the Danes.

3. It likewise notes participation of the qualities of the substantive to which it is added: as foolish, foolish; manly, manly; regal, regal.

ISICLE. n. f. [More properly icicle, from ice; but ice should rather be written ise; yr, Saxon.] A pendent shoot of ice.
Do you know this lady?

—The moon of Rome; chaste as the isicle
That's curdled by the frost from purest snow Hanging on Dian's temple. Shakespeare.

The frosts and snows her tender body spare;

Those are not limbs for isicles to rear. Dryden.

ISINGLA'S. n. f. [from ice, or ise, and glass; that is, matter congealed into glass; ichthyosella, Latin.]

Isinglass is a tough, firm, and light substance, of a whitish colour, and in some degree transparent, much resembling glue, but cleaner and sweeter. We usually receive it in twisted pieces, of a roundish figure like a staple, which the druggists divide into thin shreds like skins, that easily dissolve. The fish from which isinglass is prepared is one of the catilaginous kind, and a species of sturgeon; it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and in its general figure greatly resembles the sturgeon. It is frequent in the Danube, the Borithness, the Volga, and many other of the larger rivers of Europe. From the innelins of this fish the isinglass is prepared by boiling. The greatest quantity of isinglass is made in Russia. It is an excellent agglutinant and strengthener, and often prescribed in gellies and broths. The wine-coopers find it efficacious for clearing wines. Hill.

The cure of putrefaction requires an incrustating diet, as all vitid broths, hartshorn, ivory, and isinglass. Flyer.

Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as isinglass. Martimer.

ISINGLASS Stone. n. f. This is a fossil which is one of the purest and simplest of the natural bodies. It is found in broad masses, composed of a multitude of extremely thin plates or flakes. The masses are of a brownish or reddish colour; but when the plates are separated, they are perfectly colourless, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glass. It is found in Mulcovy, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Appennines, and the mountains of Germany. The ancients made their windows of it, instead of glass. It is also sometimes used for glass before pictures, and for horn in lanterns. Hill.

ISLAND. n. f. [insula, Latin; isla, Italian; island, Erse. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land surrounded by water. He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakespeare.

Within a long recess there lies a bay,
An island shades it from the rolling sea,
And forms a port. Dryden.

Some faster world in depth of woods embrac'd,
Some happier island in the wat'ry waste,
Island of bliss! amid the subject seas. Johnson.

ISLANDER. n. f. [from island. Pronounce islander.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.

We, as all islanders, are lunatics, or the moon's men. Comel.

Your dinner, and the generous islanders

By you invited, do attend your presence. Shakespeare.

There are many bitter sayings against islanders in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and unhoipatable; those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island. Aldison.

A race of rugged mariners are these,
Unpolish'd men, and boit'rous as their seas;

The native islanders alone their care,

And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope.

ISLE. n. f. [isle, French; isula, Latin. Pronounce ile.]

1. An island; a country surrounded by water.

It is not an easy matter

To make lord William Hastings of our mind,
For the infatuation of this noble duke
In the feat royal of this famous isle? Shakespeare.

The dreadful fight

Between a nation and two whales I write:

Scar'thin'd with pore I sing, advent'rous toil,

And how these monsters did disarm an isle. Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for isle, from isla, French, from ala, Latin, the isle being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from allee, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church, or public building.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
Long sounding isles and intermingled graves,

Black melancholy fits. Pope.

ISOPERIMETRICAL. n. f. [iso, περι, and μετρον.] In geometry, are such figures as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greatest. Harris.

ISO'SCELES. n. f. [isofele, Fr. or equiangular triangle.] That which hath only two sides equal. Harris.

ISSUE. n. f. [issue, French.]

1. The act of passing out.

2. Exit; egress; or passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death. Psalms.

Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life. Proverbs.

Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of this difficulty. Digby on Bodies.

We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are so impoverished, in what condition must they have been, if that issue of wealth had been stopped? Swift.

3. Event; consequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd,

But to fine issues. Shakespeare.

If I were ever fearful

To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,

Whereof the execution did cry out

Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear

Which oft infects the wisest. Shakespeare.

But let the issue confident prove

To good beginnings of each enterprise. Fairfax.

If things were call upon this issue, that God should never prevent sin till man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin for ever. South.

The wittiest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy.

Our present condition is better for us in the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the atheist desires. Emilyp.

4. Tissue.

4. Termination; conclusion.

He hath preferred Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a truce and prosperous issue. Sidon.

What issue of my love remains for me!

How wild a passion works within my breast!

With what prodigious flames am I possest! Dryden.

Homer, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty.

Sequel deduced from premises.

5. I am to pray you not to strain my speech

To gloss issue, nor to larger reach,

Than to supposition. Shakespeare.

6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.

This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. Wifeman.

7. Evacuation.

A woman was diseased with an issue of blood. Matthew.

8. Progeny; offspring.

O nation miserable!

When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?

Since that the trust issue of thy throne,

By his own interdiction stands accurs'd.

Nor where Absalon kings thy issue guard,

Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd

'True paradise, under the Ashup line

By Nilus' head. Milton.

This old peaceful prince, as heav'n decreed,

Was blest with no male issue to succeed. Dryden.

The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to confute with this hypothesis. Lacks.

9. [In law.] Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine or expences of suit; sometime for profits of lands or tenements; sometime for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury. Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be questio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be questio facti. Covel.

To Issue. v. n. [from the noun; issue, Fr. uissire, Italian.]

1. To come out; to pass out of any place.

Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house. Exek. xlvii. 1.

From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice. Ralegh.

Waters issu'd from a cave.

Ere Pallas issu'd from the thunderers head,

2. To make an eruption.

Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shakespeare.

See that none hence issue forth a spy. Milton.

Haste, arm your Ardians, issue to the plain;

With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train. Dryden.

At length there issu'd from the grove behind,

A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.

A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;

Straight issue through the fides assembling swarms. Dryden.

Full for the port the Ithacians stand,

And furl their sails, and issue on the land. Pope.

3. To proceed as an offspring.

Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 King. xx. 18.

4. To be produced by any fund.

Their altarsages issu'd out of the offerings made to the altar,

and were payable to the priesthood. Ayliffe.

5. To run out in lines.

It would be tried in pipes, being made with a belly towards the lower end, and then issuing into a straight concave again. Bacon's Natural History.

To Issue. v. a.

1. To send out; to send forth.

A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits. Bacon.

2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense.

If the council issu'd out any order against him, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some nobleman published a protestation. Clarendon.

Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,

A mansion proper for a mourning god:

Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees

To rivets, his dependent deities. Dryden.

In vain the master issueth out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;
The tempest's unloosen prevents their care.

They constantly wait in court to make a due return to the judge shall issue forth. Task.

ISSUELESS. adj. [from issue.] Without offspring; without descendants.

Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Highgate, as dying issueless.

I have done sin;

For which the heav'n, taking angry note,

Have left me issueless.

ISTHMUS. n. f. [isthmus, Latin.] A neck of land joining a peninsula to the continent.

There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnable fortified.

The north side of the Assyrian empire stretched notched to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian sea. Herodotus in Langes.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!

Thou weak built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise

Up betwix two eternities,

Yet can'st not wave nor wind fallain;

But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Clara.

Our church of England stands as Conant between isthmus, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, who will be at once upon it.

Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to furnish the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution.

Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,

A being darkly wile, and rudely great.

IT. pronoun. [Int. Saxon.]

1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things. Nothing can give that to another which it hath not received. Branches, aged, &c.

Will our great anger learn to stoop to low?

I know it cannot. Cap.

Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,

Thou who master art of it. Calp.

His son, it may be, dreads no harm;

But kindly waits his father's coming home. Fenn.

The time will come, it will, when you shall lose

The rage of love. Dryden.

How can I speak? or how, sir, can you hear?

Imagine that which you would most deplore,

And that which I would speak, is it or more. Dryden.

A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in conclusions!

The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabric began to melt. Alfred.

If we find a greater good in the present constitution, that would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an accident and good being, that formed it that particular way and choice.

The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imperfections of pedantry.

2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or state.

How is it with our general?

Even so

As with a man by his own aims impos'd,

And with his charity slain. Shakespeare.

3. It is used for the thing; the matter; the affair.

It's come to pass,

That tractable obedience is a slave

To each incented will. Shakespeare.

4. It is sometimes expressed by 't.

He rallied, and again fell to 't;

For catching foe by nearer foot,

He lifted with such might and strength,

As would have hurl'd him thrice his length. Herbert.

5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis. If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure.

The Lacedaemonians, at the straits of Thermopylae, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.

I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tickling up their children, and yet starve their minds.

A mole crouches it not on the ground, like the ant or maggot, but lives under the earth.

Whether the charmer finer it, or faints it, If folly grows romantic, I must point it.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrously, or really to persons. Let us assist him,

Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:

It is a peerless knifman. Shakespeare.

Do, child, go to it grandam, child :
Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him.

Shakespeare.

7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. 'Tis his mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the ity of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.

Who was't came by ?

—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word

Macduff is fled to England.

Shakespeare.

'Tis I, that made thy widows.

Shakespeare.

'Tis these that early taint the female foul.

Pope.

ITCH. n. f. zicpa, Saxon.]

1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overpreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised as microscopos have discovered by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.

Lust and liberty

Creep in the minds and narrow of our youths,
That gaint the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot, idles, bins.

Shakespeare.

The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed.

Deuteronomy.

As if divinity had catch'd

Hudibras.

The itch, on purpose, to be scratch'd.

Hudibras.

2. The infection of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.

3. A constant teasing desire.

A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, put us upon shifting.

L'Esfrance.

He had still pedigree in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king.

Dryden.

From servants company a child is to be kept, not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways.

Lact.

At half mankind when generous Manlyaves,

All know 'tis virtue; for he thinks them knaves :

When universal homage Umbra pays,

All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise.

Pope.

ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.
A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration.

Wifeman.

My tight eye itches ; some good luck is near ;

Possibly my Amoryllis may appear.

Dryden.

2. To long ; to have continual desire. This sense appears in the following examples, though the use of them are equivocal.
Matter shallow, you have yourt If been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.—Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of peace, it is a sword out, my finger itches to make one.

Shakespeare.

Cassius, you yourself

Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm,

To fell and murt your offices for gold.

Shakespeare.

The itching ears, being an epidemick disease, give fair opportunity to every mountebank.

Delay of Piety.

All such have still an itching to deride,

And fain would be upon the laughing side.

Pope.

ITCHY. adj. [from itch.] Infected with the itch.

ITEM. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.

ITEM. n. f.

1. A new article.

I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by items.

Shakespeare.

If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of mine : if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none.

Glanv.

2. A hint ; an innuendo.

To ITERATE. v. a. [iter, Latin.]

1. To repeat ; to utter again ; to inculcate by frequent mention.

We covet to make the palms especially familiar unto all :
this is the very cause why we iterate the palms often than any other part of Scripture besides ; the cause wherefore we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone to read them, as other parts of Scripture he doth.

Hosk.

If the one may monthly, the other may daily be iterated.

Hosk.

In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books ; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind : in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the bell and wrist.

Hosk.

'Tis king, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility.

Bacon.

There be two kinds of reflections of sounds ; the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly : the other in con-

N° LXXIX.

currence, when the sound reflecting, returneth immediately upon the original, and so iterates it not, but amplifies it.

Bacon's Natural History.

2. To do over again.

Asbes thoroughly burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Adam took no thought,

Eating his fill ; nor Eve to iterate

Her former trespass fear'd, the more to footh

Him with her lov'd society.

Milton.

ITERANT. adj. [iterant, Latin.] Repeating.

Waters, being near, make a current echo ; but being farther off, they make an iterant echo.

Bacon.

ITERATION. n. f. iteration, French ; iteratio, Latin.] Repetition ;
recital over again.

Truth tir'd with iteration

As true as steel, as plantage to the moon.

Shakespeare.

My husband !

Ay, 'twas he that told me first.

My husband !

What needs this iteration, woman ?

I say, thy husband.

Shakespeare.

Iterations are commonly loss of time ; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question ; for it chafeth away many a frivolous speech.

Bacon.

In all these respects it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is farther improved by the frequent iteration and repetition.

Hammond.

ITERANT. adj. [iterant, French.] Wandering ; not settled.
It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of iterant tradesmen, as also to accommodate their cries to their respective wares.

Addison.

ITERINARY. n. f. [itinerarius, French] itinerarius, Latin.] A book of travels.

The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom.

Addison.

ITINERARY. [itinerarius, Fr. itinerarius, Lat.] Travelling ; done on a journey ; done during frequent change of place.

He did make a progress from Lin. to the northern parts, though it were rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress.

Bacon.

ITSELF. pronoun. [it and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.

Who then shall blame

His peffer'd senses to recoil and start,

When all that is within him does condemn

Itself for being there ?

Shakespeare.

Borrowing for foreigners, in itself, makes not the kingdom rich or poor.

Locke.

JUBILANT. adj. [jubilant, Lat.] Uttering songs of triumph.

The planets list'ning stood,

While the bright pomp ascended jubilant.

Milton.

JUBILATION. n. f. [jubilatio, Fr. jubilatio, Lat. The act of declaring triumph.

JUBILEE. n. f. [jubilé, Fr. jubilum, from jubilo, low Latin.] A public festivity ; a time of rejoicing ; a season of joy.

Angels utt'ring joy, heav'n rung

With jubilés, and loud hosanna's fill'd

The eternal regions.

Milton.

Joy was then a masculine and a severe thing : the recreation of the judgment, or rejoicing, the jubilés of reason.

South.

The town was all a jubilés of feasts.

Dryden.

JUCUNDITY. n. f. [jucunditas, jucundus, Latin.] Pleasance ;
agreeableness.

The new or unexpected jucundities, which present themselves, will have activity enough to excite the earthiest soul,
and raise a smile from the most composed tempers.

Brown.

JUDAS Tree. n. f. [filiquastrum, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, whose wings are placed above the standard : the head is composed of two petals ; the pointal, which rises in the centre of the flower-cup, and is encompassed with the stamina, afterward becomes a long flat pod, containing several kidney-shaped seeds : to which may be added roundish leaves, growing alternately on the branches.

Judas tree yields a fine purplish, bright, red blossom in the spring, and is increased by layers.

Mertimer.

To JUDAIZE. v. n. [judaizer, Fr. judaïze, low Latin.] To conform to the manner of the Jews.

Paul judaiz'd with Jews, was all to all.

Sandy.

JUDGE. n. f. [juge, French ; judex, Latin.]

1. One who is invested with authority to determine any cause or question, real or personal.

Shall not the judge of all the earth do right ?

Genesis.

A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation.

Psalms.

Thou art judge

Of all things made, and judgest only right.

Milton.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully : it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful, as being the sovereign judge of his own art.

Dryden.

12 U

2. One

2. One who presides in a court of judicature.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away

Unto the judge that begg'd it.

Shakespeare.

A single voice; and that not pass me, but

By learned approbation of the judges.

Shakespeare.

3. One who has skill sufficient to decide upon the merit of any thing.

How darest thou pride,

As in a lifted field to fight your cause,

Unask'd the royal grant; nor marshal by,

As knightly rites require, not judge to try.

Dryden.

A perfect judge will read each piece of wit,

With the same spirit that his author writ.

Pope.

To JUDGE, v. n. [juger, French; judicio, Latin.]

1. To pass sentence.

My wrong be upon thee; the Lord judge between thee and me.

Ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment.

2 Chronicles.

Digby.

JUDGMENT, n. f. [judgment, French.]

1. The power of discerning the relations between one term or one proposition and another.

O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,

And men have lost their reason.

Shakespeare.

The faculty, which God has given man to supply the want of certain knowledge, is judgment, whereby the mind takes any proposition to be true or false, without perceiving a demonstrative evidence in the proofs.

Lacke.

Judgment is that whereby we join ideas together by affirmation or negation; so, this tree is high.

Watts.

2. Doom; the right or power of passing judgment.

It my suspect be false, forgive me, God;

For judgment only doth belong to thee.

Shakespeare.

3. The act of exercising judgment.

They gave judgment upon him.

2 Kings.

When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclosed

In majesty severe,

And sit in judgment on my soul,

O how shall I appear.

Addison.

4. Determination; decision.

Where distinctions or identities are purely material, the judgment is made by the imagination, otherwise by the understanding.

Gloucester.

We shall make a certain judgment what kind of distinction that place was capable of.

Burnet.

Reason ought to accompany the exercise of our senses, whenever we would form a just judgment of things proposed to our inquiry.

Watts.

5. The quality of distinguishing propriety and impropriety; criticism.

Judgment, a cool and slow faculty, attends not a man in the rapture of poetical composition.

Dennis.

'Tis with our judgment as our watches, none

Go just alike; yet each believes his own.

Pope.

6. Opinion; notion.

I see mens judgments are

A parcel of their fortunes, and things outward

Draw the inward quality after them,

To suffer all alike.

Shakespeare.

When she did think my matter lov'd her well,

She, in my judgment, was as fair as you.

Shakespeare.

7. Sentence against a criminal.

When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear

His knell rung out, his judgment, he was flur'd

With agony.

The chief priests informed me, desiring to have judgment against him.

Shakespeare.

8. Condemnation. This is a theological use.

The judgment was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification.

Romans.

The precepts, promises, and threatenings of the Gospel will rise up in judgment against us, and the articles of our faith will be so many articles of accusation.

Calvin.

9. Punishment inflicted by providence, with reference to some particular crime.

This judgment of the heavens that makes us tremble,

Touches us not with pity.

We cannot be guilty of greater uncharitableness, than to interpret afflictions as punishments and judgments: it aggravates the evil to him who suffers, when he looks upon himself as the mark of divine vengeance.

Calvin.

10. Distribution of justice.

The Jews made insurrection against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat.

Acts.

Your dishonour

Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state

Of that integrity which should become it.

Shakespeare.

In judgments between rich and poor, consider not what the poor man needs, but what is his own.

Isaiah.

A bold and wise petitioner goes straight to the throne and judgment seat of the monarch.

Drummond.

11. Judicial laws; statutes.

If ye hearken to their judgments, and keep and do them,

the Lord thy God shall keep upon thee the covenant.

JUGGLER. n. f. [from juggle.]

1. One who practises flight of hand; one who deceives the eye by nimble conveyance.

They say this town is full of cozenage,

As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye.

Drug-working forerers that change the mind,

Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,

And many such like libertines of sin. Shakepeare.

I saw a juggler that had a pair of cards, and would tell a man what card he thought. Bacon.

Arifteen was a famous poet, that flourished in the days of Cæsar, and a notable juggler. Sandys.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, and impostures, do daily delude them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The juggler which another's sight can show,

But teaches how the world his own may know. Garth.

One who is managed by a juggler's fancies he has money in hand; but let him grasp it never so carefully, upon a word or two it increases or dwindles. Addison.

What magick makes our money rise,

When dropt into the southern main;

Or do these jugglers cheat us? Swift.

2. A cheat; a trickish fellow.

O me, you juggler; oh, you canker blossom,

You thot' of love; what, have you come by night,

And stoll'n my love's heart from him? Shakepeare.

JULY. n. f. [Julius, Lat. juillet, Fr.] The month anciently called quintilis, or the fifth from March, named July in honour of Julius Cæsar; the seventh month from January.

July I would have drawn in a jacket of light yellow, eating cherries, with his face and bosom sun-burnt. Peachment.

JUMART. n. f. [French.]

Mules and jumarts, the one from the mixture of an ass and a mare, the other from the mixture of a bull and a mare, are frequent. Locke.

To JUMBLE. v. a. [in Chaucer, jembre, from emblir, French, Siemer.] To mix violently and confusely together.

Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised; but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed. L'Estrange.

A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning; and one may observe, how apt that is to jumble together passages of scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy scripture. Locke.

Writing is but jult like dice,

And lucky mains make people wise;

Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem. Prior:

Is it not a firmer foundation for tranquillity, to believe that all things were at first created, and are continually ordered for the best, than that the whole universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favouredly cobbled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude thrusts of matter.

How tragedy and comedy embrace,

How farce and epick get a jumbled race. Pope.

That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concurrence of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy. Swift.

To JUMBLE. v. n. To be agitated together.

They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony. Swift.

JUMBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.

Yet do they all confine a Turkish fleet.

Because I will not jump with common spirits,

And rank me with the baib'rous nations.

Herein perchance he jumps not with Lipsius.

Never did trully squire with knight,

Or knight with squire, e'er jump more right;

Their arms and equipage did fit,

As well as virtues, parts, and wit.

This shows how jocosely the jump

And commonwealth in nature jump:

For as a fly that goes to bed,

Refts with his tail above his head;

So in this mungled state of ours,

The rabble are the supreme powers.

Good wits jump, and nimbly the nimble of the two.

Good now, how your devotions jump with mine.

I am happier for finding our judgments jump in the notion.

JUMP. adv. Exactly; nicely. Obsolete.

Otherwise one man could not excel another, but all should be either absolutely good, as hitting jump that indivisible point or center wherein goodness consisteth; or else missing it, they should be excluded out of the number of well doers.

But since to jump upon this bloody question, You from the Polish wars, and you from England, Are here arriv'd.

Myself the while to draw the Moor apart, And bring him jump, when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife.

JUMP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of jumping; a leap; a skip.

The surest way for a learner is, not to advance by jumps and large strides; let that, which he sets himself to learn next, be as nearly cojoined with what he knows already, as is possible.

JUNE. n. f. [Junis, Fr. Junius, Lat.] The sixth month from January.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark green.

JUNIOR. adj. [junior, Lat.] One younger than another.

The fools my junior by a year,

Are tortur'd with suspense and fear,

Who wisely thought my age a screen,

When death approach'd to stand between.

According to the nature of men of years, I was saying at the rite of my junior, and unequal distribution of wealth.

JUNIPER. n. f. [juniperus, Lat.] A plant.

The leaves of the juniper are long, narrow, and prickly; the male flowers are, in some species, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree; but in other species they are produced on different trees from the fruit: the last is a soft pulpy berry, containing three seeds in each.

Some of our common juniper shrubs are males and some females, of the same species. The male shrubs produce, in April and May, a small kind of jule with apices on them, very large, and full of farina; the females produce more of these jule, but only the berries, which do not open till the second year, and then do not immediately fall off; so that it is no uncommon thing to see the berries of three different years at once on the same tree. The shrub is very common with us on heaths and barren hills, but the Germans use medicinally in our shops are brought from Germany, where it is greatly more abundant. The berries are powerful emollients, diuretics, and carminative.

A clyster may be made of the common decoction of mallows, bay, and juniper berries, with oil of sweet almond.

The apostle would have no revelling or juncting.

JUNTO. n. f. [Italian.] A cabal; a kind of men entered in any secret design.

Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this war, at length come and dance attendance for approbation upon a junto of petty tyrants, acted by party and prejudice, who denied fitness from learning, and grace from morality.

From this time began an intrigue between his majesty and a junto of ministers, which had like to have ended in destruction.

IVORY. n. f. [ivoire, French; ebur, Lat.]

Ivory is a hard, solid, and firm substance, of a white colour, and capable of a very good polish: it is the densest of the elephant, who carries on each side of his jaw a tooth of six or seven feet in length, of the thickness of a man's thigh at the base, and almost entirely solid; the two sometimes weighing three hundred and thirty pounds; the ivory tusks are hollow from the base to a certain height, and the cavity is filled with a compact medullary substance, forming to have a great number of glands in it.

The finest ivory is brought from the East-Indies, where a great quantity of it is not taken immediately from the head of the animal, but found buried in the earth. The ivory of the islands of Ceylon found buried in the earth. The ivory of the islands of Ceylon found buried in the earth. The ivory of the islands of Ceylon found buried in the earth.

There is more difference between the two kinds and hens, than between jet and ivory.

Draw Erato with a sweet and lovely countenance, leaning a heart with an ivory key.

From their ivory port the cherubim

Forth ill'd.

Two gates the silent house of sleep adorn,

Of polish'd ivory this, that of transparent horn:

True visions through transparent horn arise,

Through polish'd ivory pass deluding lies.

This is not to be measured by the principles of jurists. Bacon.

JUR'OR. n. f. [jura, Lat.] One that serves on the jury.

Were the jurors picked out of choice men, this would be as bad; for the evidence will be as deceitful as the verdict. Spenser.

I shall find your lordship judge and juror,

You are so merciful, I see your end,

'Tis my undoing. Shakspeare.

I sing no harm, good foath! to any knight,

Officer, jugler, or justice of peace,

Juror, or judge. Donne.

About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in. Hayward.

JUR'Y. n. f. [jurata, Lat. jura, Fr.]

Jury, a company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, sworn to deliver a truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question. There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assize or jury. The trial by assize, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, so passeth the judgment. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the ecclesiastick make inquisition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest: if the coroner enquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest: the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner: so that where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize, assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, empowered upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half year courts of the justices errants, commonly called the great assizes, and in the quarter-sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assize, there are usually many juries, because there be severall causes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereas one is called the grand jury, and the rest petty juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, bi la vera, or disapprove by writing upon them these words, bi la vera, or disallow by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred, where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the defendant or tenant: according unto which, judgment passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began; and the reason hereof is, because these justices of assize are, in this case, for the ease of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called writ prius, and to return it to the court where the cause is depending. Carroll.

The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guittier than him they try. Shakspeare.

How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness. Shakspeare.

Claudius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict. Bacon.

JUR'YMAN. n. f. [jury and man.] One who is impanelled on a jury.

The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine. Pope.

No jury was known, upon or off the bench, to use the least insinuation, that might affect the interests of any one single jurymen, much less of a whole jury. Swift.

JUR'YMAN. n. f. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a mast lost in a fight, or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost mast, fastening it into the partners, and fitting it to the mizen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a hard shift to sail. Harris.

JUST. adj. [justus, Fr. justus, Latin.]

1. Upright; incorrupt; equitable in the distribution of justice. Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage

Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age. Dryden.

JUSTICE. n. f. [justice, French; justitia, Latin.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due.

O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2 Sam. xv. 4.

The king, becoming graces,

As justice, verity, temperance, flableness,

I have no reliſh of them. Shakespeare.

The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be conversant about something that is due to another. Lee.

2. Vindicative retribution; punishment.

This flows you are above

Yon justices, that these our nether crimes

So speedily can venge. Shakespeare.

He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut. xxxiii. 21.

That if my speech offend a noble heart,

Thy arm may do that justice. Shakespeare.

4. [justitarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment. Cicero.

And thou, Eneas, ordain judges and justities, that they may judge in all Syria. 1 Esdr. viii. 23.

5. JUSTICE of the King's Bench. [justiciarius de Banco Regis.]
Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the reit; wherefore he is also called capitaneus justiciarius Anglie. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown; dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhem, and such like: but it is come to pass, that he with his assessors hearth all personal actions, and real also, if they be incident to any personal action depending before them.

Coar.

Give that whistler his errand,

He'll take my lord chief justice warrant. Prin.

6. JUSTICE of the Common Pleas. [justiciarius Communis Pleciturum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciarius communium placitarum. He with his assessors originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law; that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas,
which are special, and appertaining to him only. Coar.

7. JUSTICE of the Forest. [justiciarius Forste.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or warren of these there be two, whereas the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Coar.

8. JUSTICES of Assize. [justicarii ad assisas Assis.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that county to take assizes; the ground of which plea was the case of the subjects: for whereas these assizes pass ways by jury, so many men might not, without great ha-zardance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorized and sent down to them. Coar.

9. JUSTICES in Eyre. [justicarii itinerantes.] Are the justices of the French erre, iter. The use of these, in ancient times, was to send them with commission into divers counties, to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent about for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the king's bench, if the cause were too high for the lower court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Terminer, because they were sent upon some one or few special causes, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Coar.

10. JUSTICES of Gaol Delivery. [justicarii ad Carceres liberandos.] Are such as are sent by special commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as are

The justices.

In fair round belly with good capon laid,

With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,

Full of wise saws, and modern instances,

And so he plays his part. Shakespeare.

Thou hast appointed justice of the peace to call you out before them, about matters they were not able to carry.

The justices of peace are of great use: anciently they were conservators of the peace; there are the same, how that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction.
Bacon's Advice to a Friend.

I sing no harm

To officer, juggler, or justice of peace. Dow.

TO JUSTICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. A word not in use.

Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

TO JUSTIFY. v. a. [from just.] To shoot out beyond.

Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head

Like a brass cannon; let the brow o'erwhelm it
As fearfully, as doth a galled rock

O'erhang and justify his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.

Shakspeare.

JUVENILE. adj. [juvenilis, Latin.] Young; youthful.

Learning hath its infancy, when it is almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxurious and juvenile; then its strength of years, when it is solid; and lastly, its old age, when it waxes dry and exhaust.

Bacon's Essays.

JUVENILITY. n. f. [from juvenis.] Youthfulness.

The restoration of grey hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected without a miracle.

Glanville.

Customary strains and abstracted juvenilities have made it difficult to commend and speak credibly in dedications.

Glanville.

I V Y

JUXTAPOSITION. n. f. [juxtaposition, French; juxta and positio, Latin.] Apposition; the state of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, since the coherence of these will be of difficult conception; and we must either suppose an infinite number of them holding together, or at last come to parts that are united by a mere juxtaposition.

Glanville.

Ivy. n. f. [ivy, Saxon; hedera, Latin.] A plant.

The characters are: it is a parasitical plant, sending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is fastened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great share of its nourishment: the leaves are angular; the flowers, for the most part, consist of six leaves, and are succeeded by round black berries, which grow

 Before my foot faults you with a kick. Dryden.

KICKER n. f. [from kick.] One who strikes with his foot.

KICKSHAW n. f. [This word is supposed, I think with truth, to be only a corruption of quelque chose, something; yet Milton seems to have understood it otherwise; for he writes it kickshaw, and seems to think it used in contempt of dancing.]

1. Something uncommon; fantastical; something ridiculous.

Shall we need the monieus of Paris to take our hopeful youth into their slight and prodigal ecstasies, and send them over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kickshaws? Milton.

2. A dish so changed by the cookery that it can scarcely be known.

Some pigeons, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaw. Shakspeare.

In wit, as well as war, they give us vigour;

KICKSWICKSEY n. f. [from kick and wince.] A made word in ridicule and disdain of a wife. Hammer.

12 Z

He wears his honour in a box, unseen,
That hugs his kill (i.e. spine) here at home,
Spending his mouldy marrow in her arms.

Shakespeare.

KILN. n. f. [kill, Danish.]

1. The young of a goat.

Leaping like wanton kids in pleasant spring. Spenser.

There was a herd of goats with their young ones, upon which fight Sir Richard Graham tells, he would snap one of the kids, and carry him off to their lodging. Hutton.

Spurning the lion ramp'd, and in his paw

Danell'd the kid. Milton.

So kid and whelp's their fires and dams express;

And for the great I measure'd by the left. Dryden.

steal children; to steal human beings.

KIDNAPPER. n. f. [from kidnap.] One who steals human beings.

The man compounded with the merchant, upon condition that he might have his child again; for he had smelt it out, that the merchant himself was the kidnapper. L'Estrange.

These people lie in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law. Spettator.

KIDNEY. n. f. [Etymology unknown.]

1. These are two in number, one on each side: they have the same figure as kidney beans; their length is four or five fingers, their breadth three, and their thickness two: the right is under the liver, and the left under the spleen. The use of the kidneys is to separate the urine from the blood, which, by the motion of the heart and arteries, is thrust into the emulgent branches, which carry it to the little glands, by which the se-rofity being separated, is received by the orifice of the little tubes, which go from the glands to the pelvis, and from thence it runs by the ureters into the bladder. Quincy.

A youth laboured under a complication of diseases, from his infertility and kidneys. Wife'sman's Surgery.

2. Race; kind; in ludicrous language.

Think of that, a man of my kidney; think of that, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

There are millions in the world of this man's kidney, that take up the same resolution without noise. L'Estrange.

KIDNEYBEAN. n. f. [so named from its shape.]
It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which becomes a long pod, inclosing several seeds, which are fluted almost like a kidney; it has pinnated leaves, consisting of an unequal number of lobes. Milner.

Kidneybeans are a sort of cod ware, that are very pleasant wholesome food. Mortimer's Husbandry.

pears by drinking it with fustic. Feyer on the Hæmaturia.

KILLER. n. f. [from kill.] One that deprives of life.

What sorrow, what amazement, what shame was in Am-phibius, when he saw his dear foster-father find him the killer of his only son! Sidney.

Will't thou for the old lion hunt, or fill

His hungry whelps? and for the killer kill,

When couch'd in dreadful dens? Soudry.

So rude a time

When love was held for capital a crime,

That a crown'd head could no compassion find,
But dy'd, because the killer had been kind. Wife.

KILTLOW. n. f. [This seems a corruption of kill and low, flame, as low is thereby produced.]

An earth of a blackish or deep blue colour, and kill (i.e. low) its name from kill, by which name, in the north, the mud or grime on the backs of chimneys is called. Hutton.

KILN. n. f. [cylin, Saxon.] A floor; a kiln (i.e. low) admitting heat, in order to dry or burn things contained in it.

To milk my kin. Ben. Jonson
- KING. n. f. [A contraction of the Teutonic word king, or king, the name of sovereign dignity. In the primitive tongue it signifies stout or valiant, the kings of most nations being, in the beginning, chosen by the people on account of their valour and strength. Perthgar.]
1. Monarch; supreme governor.
The great King of ling,
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder. Shaksp
- A substitute thines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his fate
Imports an inland, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shaksp
- True hope is swift, and flies with swallows wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures king. Shaksp
- The king becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, flableness,
Bounty, pious fancy, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shaksp
- Thus flates were form'd; the name of king unknown,
'Till common interest plac'd the sway in one;
'Twas virtue only, or in arts or arms,
Diffusing blessings, or averting harms,
The fame which in a fire the sons obey'd,
A prince the father of a people made. Pope
2. It is taken by Bacon in the feminine: as prince also is Ferdinand and Isabella, king of Spain, recovered the great and rich kingdom of Granada from the Moors. Bacon

2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer or steal away suddenly with a snatch.
TO KNAB. v. a. [knappen, Dutch; Knag, Erfc.] To bite.
Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; so as that knab and knag may be the same.
I had much rather lie knabbing crusts, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with cares. L'Estr.
An ass was willing, in a hard winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knab upon. L'Estr.
KNACK. n. f. [knag, Welsh, a piquancy; knagge, skill, Sax.]
1. A little machine; a petty contrivance; a toy.
When I was young, I was wont
To load my sle with knacks: I would have ranfack'd
The pedlar's filken treasury, and have pour'd it
To her acceptance. Shakspeare.
For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know thou do'st but fight
That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never
I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from success. Shakspeare.
This cap was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd and filthy:
Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap.
But it's not presumption to write verse to you,
Who make the better poems of the two?
For all these pretty knacks that you compose,
Alas, what are they but poems in prose!
He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
A copper-plate, with almanacks
Engrav'd upon't, with other knacks. Hudibras.
2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.
I'll teach you the knacks
Of eating of flax
And out of their noses
Draw ribbands and posies. Ben. Jonson.
The knack of fall and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware all this while of the deperate consequences of an ill habit. L'Estrange.
There is a certain knack in the art of conversation that gives a good grace to many things, by the manner and address of handling them. L'Estrange.
Knaves, who in full assemblies have the knack
Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryden.
My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes NO LXXX.

- another, about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Athenbury.

quick noise. Ainsworth.
KNAPSACK. n. f. [from knappen, to eat.] The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.
The constitution of this church shall not be repealed, 'till
I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knap- sacks. King Charles.
If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest: there are hedges in summer, and barns in winter to be found: I with my knapsack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel 'till we come to the ridge of the world.
Dryden's Spanish Friar.
KNAPWEED. n. f. [jacea, Latin.]
This is one of the headed plants destitute of spines: the cup is squamose; the borders of the leaves are equal, being neither serrated nor indented: the florets round the border of the head are barren; but those placed in the center are succeeded each by one seed, having a down adhering to it. There are fifty species of this plant, thirteen of which grow wild in England, and the rest are exotics. Aitler.
KNARE. n. f. [knar, German.] A hard knot.
A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground,
And prickly thorns instead of trees are found;
Or woods with knots and knarres deform'd and old,
Headless the moss, and hideous to behold. Dryden.
KNAVE. n. f. [cnape, Saxon.]
1. A boy; a male child.
2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.
For as the moon the eye doth please
With gentle beams not hurting sight,
Yet hath fir sun the greater praise,
Because from him doth come her light;
So if my man must praises have,
What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.
He eats and drinks with his domestic slaves;
A verier hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.
3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.
Most men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools; knaves, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. South.
When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, their equity against both. L'Estrange.
An honest man may take a knave's advice;
But idiots only may be cozen'd twice. Dryden.
See all our souls aspiring to be knaves. Pope.
4. A card with a soldier painted on it.
For 'twill return, and turn 't account,
If we are brought in play upon't,
Or but by calling knave get in,
What pow'r can hinder us to win? Hudibras.
KNATERY. n. f. [from knave.]
1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villainy.
Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together. Shakspeare.
If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do't; I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.
Here's

Here's the folly of the ass in trusting the fox, and here's the unwary of the fox in betraying the ass. L'Estrange.

The cunning courier should be flighted too,
Who with dull knavery makes so much ado,
'Till the shrewd fool, by thriving too too fast,
Like Asop's fox, becomes a prey at last. Dryden.

2. Mischievous tricks or practices. In the following passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps for trifling things of more cost than use.

We'll revel it as bravely as the best,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery. Shakespeare.

1. A complication of a cord or string not easily to be disentangled.

He found that reason's self now reasons found
To fallen knots, which fancy first had bound. Sidney.
As the fair vessel to the fountain came,
Let none be startled at a vessel's name,
Tir'd with the walk, she laid her down to rest;
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air,
And gather'd in a knar her flowing hair. Addison.

2. Any figure of which the lines frequently intersect each other.

Garden knots, the frets of houses, and all equal figures, please;
whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon.

Our sea-wall'd garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds, her fairest flowers choked up,
Her knots disorder'd. Shakspeare's Richard II.

It fed flow's worthy of paradise, which not nice art

In beds and curious knots, but nature boon,

Pour'd forth profuse on hill and dale, and plain. Milton.

Their quarters are contriv'd into elegant knots, adorned with the most beautiful flowers. Morse.

Henry in knuts involving Emma's name,

Had half-expos'd, and half-conceal'd his flame

Upon this tree; and as the tender mark

Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,

Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,

That, as the wound, the passion might increase. Prior.

3. Any bond of association or union.

Confirm that amity

With nuptial knut, if thou vouchsafe to grant

That virtuous lady Bona. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

As he began, and not unknit himself

The noble knut he made. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Why left you wife and children,

Those precious motives, those strong knuts of love. Shak.

Not all that Saul could threaten or persuade,

In this close knut, the smallest looseness made. Cowley.

4. A hard part in a piece of wood caused by the protuberance of a bough, and consequently by a transverse direction of the fibres. A joint in an herb.

Taking the very refuse among those which served to no use, being a crooked piece of wood, and full of knuts, he hath carved it diligently, when he had nothing else to do. Wijman.

Such knuts and crosslets of grain is objected here, as will hardly suffer that form which they cry up here as the only just reformation, to go on so smoothly here as it might do in some land. Long's Choice.

5. A confederacy; an association; a small band.

Oh you panderly rascals! there's a knut, a gang, a confederacy against me. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

What is there here in Rome that can delight me?

Where not a foul, without thine own foul taste!

But fears and hates thee. Ben. Jonson's Casare.

A knut of good fellows borrowed a sum of money of a physician upon the king's highway. Lightfoot.

I am now with a knut of his admirers, who make request that you would give notice of the window where the knut is tends to appear. Addison's Spectator.

6. Difficulty; intricacy.

A man shall be perplexed with knuts and problems of logic, and contrary affairs, where the determination is obscure, and both parts of the contrariety seem equally weighty; but which way favour the contrary determines, a man is sure to venture a great concern. Saunders's Grammar.

7. Any intrigue, or difficult perplexity of affairs.

When the discovery was made that the king was living, which was the knut of the play united, the rest is that up into compacts of some few lines, because nothing then hinders the happiness of Torimond and Leonora. Dryden's Dido.

8. A cluter; a collection.

The way of fortune is like the milky way in the sky, which is a meeting or knut of a number of small stars, not seen alone, but giving light together.

In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are less groups or sets of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more effectual manner. Dryden's Dido.

To KNOT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To complicate in knots.

"I'll supper and my wife appear."

To KNOW. v. a. preter. I knew, I have known. [cognan, Saxon.]

1. To perceive with certainty, whether intuitive or discursive.

O, that a man might know

The end of this day's business ere it come!

The memorial of virtue is immortal, because it is known with God and with men.

The gods, all things know.

Not from experience, for the world was new,

He only from their cause their natures knew.

We doubt not, neither can we properly say we think we admire and love you above all other men: there is a certainty in the proposition, and we know it.

When a man makes use of the name of any simple idea, which he perceives is not understood, or is in danger to be mistaken, he is obliged by the laws of ingenuity, and the end of speech, to declare his meaning, and make known what idea he makes it stand for.

2. To be informed of; to be taught

Ye shall be healed, and it shall be known to you why his hand is not removed from you.

Led on by a desire to know

What nearer might concern him.

One would have thought you had known better things than to expect a kindness from a common enemy.

3. To distinguish.

Numeration is but the adding of one unit more, and giving to the whole a new name, whereby to know it from those before and after, and distinguish it from every smaller or greater multitude of units.

4. To recognize.

What a monstrous fellow art thou, that to rail on me, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee?

They told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread.

At nearer view he thought he knew the dead,

And call'd the wretched man to mind.

Tell me how I may know him.

5. To be no stranger to.

—A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity.

6. To converse with another sex.

And Adam knew Eve his wife.

7. To fee with approbation.

They have reigned, but not by me; they have set a superiority over themselves, but I know nothing of it.

8. To know. v. n.

I have clear and certain perception; not to be doubtful.
I know of a surety that the Lord hath sent his angel, and delivered me out of the hand of Herod.

9. Not to be ignorant.

When they know within themselves they speak of that they do not well know, they never believe, seem to others to know of that which they may not well speak.

Not to know of things remote, but know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime of wisdom.

In the other world, there is no consideration that will sting our consciences more cruelly than this, that we did wickedly, when we knew to have done better; and chose to make ourselves miserable, when we understood the way to have been happy.

They might understand those excellencies which they blindly valued, so as not to be farther imposed upon by bad pieces, and to know when nature was well imitated by the most able masters.

10. To be informed.

The prince and Mr. Pains will put on two of our jerkins and aprons, and for John must not know of it.

There is not any mineral body, that we know of, heavier than common quicksilver.

11. To know for. To have knowledge of. A colloquial expression.

He said the water itself was a good healthy water; but for the party that own'd it, he might have more diseases than he knew for.

12. To know of. In Shakespeare, is to take cognizance of; to examine.

Fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun,
For a maid to be in shady cloister mew'd.

Knowable. adj. [from know.] Cognoscible; possible to be discovered or understood.

These are resolved into a confessed ignorance, and I shall not pursue them to their old asylum; and yet it may be, there is more knowable in these than in less acknowledged mysteries.

It is plain, that under the law of works is comprehended law given by Mose.

These two arguments are the voices of nature, the unanimous suffrages of all real beings and substances created, that are naturally knowable without revelation.

Know'er. n. f. [from know.] One who has skill or knowledge.

If we look on a vegetable as made of earth, we must have the true theory of the nature of that element, or we miserably fail of our scientific aspirations; and while we can only say 'tis cold and dry, we are pitiful knowers.

I know the respect and reverence which in this address I ought to appear in before you, who are a general know'er of mankind and poetry.

Know'ing. adj. [from know.]

1. Skilful; well instructed; remote from ignorance.

You have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he, which hath our noble father slain,
Pursu'd my life.

The know'ingst of these have of late reformed their hypocrisies.

What makes the clergy glorious is to be knowing in their profession, unspotted in their lives, active and laborious in their charges.

The necessity of preparing for the offices of religion was a lesson which the mere light and dictates of common reason, without the help of revelation, taught all the knowing and intelligent part of the world.

Gio Bellino, one of the first who was of any consideration at Venice, painted very drily, according to the manner of his time: he was very knowing both in architecture and perspective.

All animals of the same kind, which form a society, are more knowing than others.

2. Confiscious; intelligent.

Could any but a knowing prudent cause
Begin such motions and assign such laws?
If the Great Mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system blame?

Know'ing. n. f. [from know.] Knowledge.

Let him be so entertain'd as suits gentlemen of your know'ing to a franger of his quality.

Knowingly. adv. [from know'ing.] With skill; with knowledge.

He knowingly and wittingly brought evil into the world.

They who before were rather fond of it than knowingly admitted it, might defend their inclination by their reason.

To the private duties of the closet he repaired, as often as he entered upon any business of consequence: I speak knowingly.

Know'ledge. n. f. [from know.]

1. Certain perception; indubitable apprehension.
Knowledge, which is the highest degree of the speculative faculties, consists in the perception of the truth of affirmative or negative propositions.

2. Learning; illumination of the mind.

Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n.

3. Skill in any thing.

Do but say to me what I should do,
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prest unto it.

4. Acquaintance with any fact or person.

The dog straight fawned upon his master for old know'ledge.

That is not forgot,
Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge
I never in my life did look on him.

5. Cognizance; notice.

Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger?

A Rate's anger should not take Knowledge either of fools or women.

6. Information; power of knowing.

I pulled off my headpiece, and humbly intreated her pardon, or knowledge why she was cruel.

To know'ledge. v. a. [not in use.] To acknowledge; to know.

The prophet Hosea tells us that God faith of the Jews, they have reigned, but not by me; which proveth plainly, that there are governments which God doth not avow; for though they be ordained by his secret providence, yet they are not know'ledge by his revealed will.

To know'ble. v. a. [impler, Danish.] To be known.

K N U

KNU'CKLE. n. f. [cnucle, Saxon; knucle, Dutch.]

1. The joints of the fingers protuberant when the fingers close.

Thus often at the Temple-stairs we've seen

Two tritons, of a rough athletic mien,
Sourly dispute some quarrel of the flood,

With knuckles bruis'd, and face besmear'd in blood. Garib.

2. The knee joint of a calf.

We find also that Scotch skinck, which is a pottage of strong nourishment, is made with the knees and sinews of beef, but long boiled: jelly also, which they used for a restorative, is chiefly made of knuckles of veal. Bacon.

3. The articulation or joint of a plant.

Divers herbs have joints or knuckles, as it were stops in their germination; as gillyflowers, pinks, fennel, and corn. Bacon's Natural History.

To KNU'CKLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To submit: I suppose from an odd custom of striking the under side of the table with the knuckles, in confusion of an argumental defeat.

KNU'CKLED. adj. [from knuckle.] Jointed.

The reed or cane is a watry plant, and groweth not but in the water: it hath these properties, that it is hollow, and is knuckled both stalk and root; that, being dry, it is more hard and fragile than other wood; that it putteth forth an knuff, though many stalks out of one root.

K Y D

KNUFF. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from knaze, or the same with chuff.] A knot. An old word preserved in a rhyme of prediction.

The country knuffs, Hob, Dick, and Hick,
With clubs and clouted swoon,
Shall fill up Duffindale

With slaughtered bodies soon.

KNUR. n. f. [knur, German.] A knot; a hard knot. Heyward.

KNURLE. n. f. flance.
